The main factors are 30 2, 3 and 5. Aside from being Factors 30, numbers 2, 3 and 5 are also prime numbers, meaning they can be split equally either number 1 or on their own. Figures 2, 3 and 5 are also the first three major numbers. While finding the main factors of a positive integer can be a multi-stage procedure in some cases, identifying the main factors of a positive composite integer 30 can be easily achieved by following two basic factorization rules. The first of these rules states that even a number, such as 30 in this case, will always have 2 as one of its main factors. Since this provides 2 as a factor, 30 is divided into 2 equals 15. Another basic rule of factoring is that any number ending in 5 will have 5 as one of its main factors. Since 15 is not a simple number, further separation is required, leading to a split of 15 to 5 equal 3. Since 3 is the main number, further division is not required, and the main factorization of 30 is represented by 2 x 3 x 5 and 30. According to the fundamental theorem of arithmetic, each positive integrator will have its own unique and unique underlying factorization.
