Whether you've played since Generation I or new to Pokémon training, there's a lot to learn about Pokémon games. You may not have played a Pokémon game in a while and want to know where to pick up, or you might want to learn more about Pokémon games in general to find out if you'd like to play them. The Pokémon franchise is huge, but fortunately, Pokémon games tend to be as enjoyable for new players as they are for those who have played for years, collected all the trading cards and watched all the shows. Continue reading to delve deeper into the world of Pokémon games. ConsoleSin's main considerations that Pokémon games are published by Nintendo, they are available primarily on Nintendo consoles. While there are some mobile apps available, you'll probably need a Nintendo console, such as Switch, to play. If you have a specific game in mind, check its compatibility with your console before buying. GenerationAll Pokémon games belong to a certain generation, grouped with other Pokémon games released in the same or similarly. Each generation has its own unique Pokémon (although many Pokémon are found over several generations) and is set in a different region. The first Generation I games were released in 1996. Generation I includes Pokémon Red, Blue, and Yellow and is set in the Kanto region. Generation II includes Pokémon Gold, Silver and Crystal and is set in the Johto region. Generation III includes Pokémon Ruby, Sapphire, Emerald, FireRed and LeafGreen and is set in the Hoenn region. Generation IV includes Pokémon Diamond, Pearl, Platinum, HeartGold and SoulSilver and is set in the Sinnoh region. Generation V includes Pokémon Black, White, Black 2, and White 2 and is set in the Unova region. Generation VI includes Pokémon X, Y, Omega Ruby and Alpha Sapphire and is set in the Kalos region. Generation VII includes Pokémon Sun, Moon, Ultra Sun, Ultra Moon, Let's Go: Pikachu and Let's Go: Eevee and takes place in the Alola region. Generation VIII includes only Pokémon Sword and Shield and is set in the Galar region. PlotThe time that each game varies slightly, all follow a similar plot. You start the game as a complete Pokémon trainer who is gifted with a Pokémon to work with. Your goal is to catch and create Pokémon, making them strong enough for you to defeat all the gym leaders in the region and go on to beat even more difficult enemies (in previous games, you must fight the Elite Four, but in Sword and Shield, you have to complete the Battle of Champions). There are additional subplots to keep things interesting. GameplayPokémon games are usually turn-based RPGs, so fighting is not in real time. Instead, you choose a move to free your enemy that in turn triggers a movement in This keeps Pokémon battles at a more relaxed pace than many players like. When you're not fighting, you your way from city to city in the region. The area between cities is where you'll find wild Pokémon to catch and other Pokémon trainers to fight to increase the strength of your Pokémon. Did you know that? Pokémon game regions are usually based on real places. For example, Alola is based in Hawaii and Galar is based in the UK. STAFFBestReviewsThe total number of Pokémon in all games now exceeds 1,000, but you won't be able to catch them all in all games. Most generations feature about 100 Pokémon. GymsThe cities in the region of your game have a gym. You must challenge these gyms and defeat the leader to progress with the game. EvolutionManequinas, but not all, Pokémon evolve into new shapes as they become stronger or with the help of items such as moon stones. Faq. What age group are Pokémon games suitable for? A. Pokémon games are rated E for everyone, which means there is nothing unsuitable for young children in them. That said, young people may find certain gameplay elements complicated, so they are usually most appreciated by players 8 to 10 years or older. What's great about Pokémon games is that they appeal to both older and younger players, and many adults like to play them as well. Q. What is the difference between a main game and a spin-off? A. The main Pokémon games are those that are listed under the Generations subposition above and follow the standard plot of catching and elevating Pokémon with the goal of defeating the gym leaders. Spin-off games are set in the World of Pokémon, but have different storylines. For example, the game Detective Pikachu was about solving mysteries with a Pikachu. Q. How can I use Pokémon types to my advantage? A. All Pokémon have at least one type, but some have two. All types have strengths and weaknesses against other types. Electric types are strong against water types, for example, so if you hit a water-like Pokémon with an electric movement, it will do twice as much damage. Millions of players went to their phones to capture animated monsters in Pokemon Go this weekend, but some players have no doubt been trapped by the game's free purchases. With its innovative use of augmented reality technology, zero cost to enter and a tie-in for a famous gaming franchise, the app already has more installs than Tinder and may soon overtake Twitter in daily active users, according to data from SimilarWeb.Pokemon Go is just the latest example of a free-to-play game or freemium that goes viral. But for players who enter the game like this they are willing to spend a lot to get ahead in the game, the game will be far from free. Minimum cost: $0; maximum cost: ? As in Free-to-play game, the minimum cost to play Pokeom Go is zero, but the maximum is potentially hundreds of dollars. That's because you can spend real world money to buy Poke Coins, an in-game currency Can be used to buy items to help you catch and develop the eponymous animated characters games. The Pokemon Company says the purchase items are for players who want to further enhance their Pokemon Go experience. My co-worker is spending money for Pokemon coins — Elisabeth Page (@MissEllieCakes) July 11, 2016And these items don't come cheap. Some in-game items will cost $10 or more, and the largest in-game coin cache you can buy costs $100 in real dollars. Someone determined to collect all 151 Pokemon in the game could spend as much or more if they are not willing to walk or drive through the city hunting the beasts on their own. Most people who play a freemium game will probably never make an in-app purchase. A study by Swrve, a mobile marketing and research firm, found that in February this year, only 1.9% of active mobile game players in a month made an in-app purchase during that month. Pokemon is actually draining my battery and making me break from buying coins —Kaylyn Brown (@KlynPaige) July 9, 2016But paying players spent significant amounts of money —an average of $24.66 each, Swrve's study found. And once you've made an in-game purchase, you're likely to make another one: 56% of payers who bought something in the game in the first 14 days of getting a freemium game went on to make a repeat purchase. That may be one of the reasons Nintendo's shares are rising — the stock closed up 24.52% in Monday's trading session in Tokyo. One analyst, Mia Nagasaka of Morgan Stanley MUFG Securities, estimated that Pokemon Go made between $3.9 million and $4.9 million on its first day. Don't get carried away by a 'broken' ball All that money is great for Nintendo, and walking around there are probably some Pokemon Go players making questionable decisions about how much to spend, even when you read it. Girls- Dating a guy who will spend $100 on you for 14,500 Coins Pokemon Go - MacKenzie (@Kenzstevenson) July 11, 2016If you're thinking of becoming a paying user or already have, here are some tips to ensure you don't end up with tons of Pokemon but no money in your checking account. Give yourself a cooling period. Whether you play the game from time to time or just stayed up all night and run out of your smartphone battery twice playing it (without judgment), the middle of a gaming session is probably not the best time to make a buying decision with real-world implications. Instead, lower the phone for a few minutes to do something else, such as talking to a loved one, eating a snack, or following step 2 below. Find a real room in your budget. If you're feeling to buy Poke Coins or any other in-game item in a freemium game, treat it as you would any other item and add it to your weekly or monthly budget. That way, you can get an idea of what you're going to give in real life to get these virtual items. Keep your limit budgeted. Don't allow yourself to spend more than you have budgeted, and if you feel tempted, force yourself to go back to your budget and find space again. Watch your spending out of the game. Pokemon Go is unique in which it takes out players and is about to find Pokemon in the real world. This is probably a good thing for many players (although it has led to a wave of thefts in the real world); just make sure you don't end up blowing up your gas budget or being lured into overspending on companies trying to profit. What do you think? Have you ever been tempted to spend on a freemium game like Pokemon Go? Follow me on Twitter: @claesbell. Playing Pokemon Go non-stop for almost two weeks made you feel a little guilty? Have you ever wondered if maybe there are ways to do good while playing Pokemon Go so you can feel a little better about dedicating two hours to catch this Charmander? If your consciousness is starting to itch every time you load the super popular augmented reality game - never be afraid! There are ways to turn this global obsession into a chance to give back, and that sweaty Charmander into a good deed. The Nintendo app has had over 15 million downloads since July 6, and is on more than 10% of Android phones (reliable statistics for iOS devices are not yet available). It seems that everywhere we look people are on the streets, eyes glued to the screen as they slide to catch an Onyx. The app has done wonders for people with depression and anxiety, and there are still more unexplored ways that the game can be used to benefit the community. Whether the unprecedented success of the game is sustainable has been much debated, but it's time to use all this lovely nostalgia to make a difference! And if instead of worrying about how to save battery while playing Pokemon Go, we think about how to save lives? Well... I don't think we can take this that far, but who knows? Before logging in, check out these easy ways to use Pokemon Go to do good things and start making a difference:1. Dropping baits in soup kitchens and volunteer organizations Debopping a bait module in Pokemon Go lures Pokemon to a Pokestop for 30 minutes. These useful tools have an unintended consequence - they attract other players as well. Small businesses have already figured out how to use bait modules to attract a crowd and increase sales, but they can also boost donations! As you may have already noticed, a large percentage of the designated Pokestops are churches. Many of these institutions also run soup kitchens at least once a week, and by dropping a bait on the day they serve hot meals, you can inspire colleagues pokemon to volunteer. Local food banks, or donation centers near local sights are also excellent targets for your baits. Using Pokemon Go for for the visibility of these organizations is a great way to repay (and each bait costs only 99 cents in the Pokestore). You can even hatch an egg while walking to leave some donations of clothes - so it's win-win for everyone.2. Dropping bait snares on blood units The American Red Cross recently reported a shortage of blood donations in the U.S., and on July 5 they issued an emergency call for blood and palette donations. The Red Cross and blood banks are the main providers of hospitals, and these organizations are counted to replenish the country's supply. The Red Cross reports that this summer blood is being distributed to hospitals faster than it is being replaced. A shortage like this is quite common due to vacation plans that interrupt donations and the fact that the school is not in session (which is where many hemocentes are performed). Try to release a bait the next time there is a unit of blood in your area, or near a blood bank. You can still grab them all while you give (and after you get free juice!).3. Drop Lure Modules No HospitalsA few players are encouraging people to leave baits outside children's hospitals in order to brighten patients' days. Sure, catching a Pokemon is a great way to cheer someone up, but before you drop a bait in a hospital, make sure the hospital is okay with that. Some hospitals, although they appreciate the good intentions, have patients who are too sick to play. They worry that not being able to catch the Pokemon outside the infirmary can put more stress on patients and leave them disappointed. Check with the team to see if they can suggest a good place to drop a bait (cafeteria, waiting room) and make someone happy.4. Walking Shelter Dogs Want to spend time with a Growlithe IRL? An Indiana animal shelter is using Pokemon Go to attract new volunteers, encouraging players to put this whole walk to good use. Shelter dogs need to be walked, but if the shelter has too many occupants and few staff, it's hard to give each dog the time out it deserves. Volunteer to walk a lovely dog at a local animal shelter and feel good about hatching that 10k egg! Check out volunteer opportunities here.5. Signing up for a 5k walkathon or 10k!Tumblr user Dratinimartini recently posted a great tip for Pokemon Go players looking to do well: sign up for a local charity walk of 5k or 10k. Dratinimartini writes: These usually happen in parks and big cities, so not only will you get into some serious egg hatching, but you'll also likely pass through some pokestops or gyms along the :) All this upon supporting the good cause of Choice. Dratinimartini points out that traffic will be blocked for the event, so you can finally safely go after that illusory Persian. Check out this list of fundraising hikes to find an event near you!6. Supporting local businesses in a local café, bookstore or restaurant and drop a bait. What could be better than supporting a local business while catching Pokemon in some lovely air conditioning!7. Using a donation app while walkingThe Charity Miles donation app encourages you to move with purpose, and not just to find that Fearow. The app will donate money from corporate sponsors to the charity of your choice for every mile you walk. Donations are limited to a certain amount, but if you are playing every day, you may well make a difference.
