Troop committee guidebook bsa

You may not have noticed, but earlier this year the Scout stores and Procurement Department replaced the Troop Commission Guide with a new version. The previous version, point 34505B, was originally published in 1998 and has been reprinted several times since. The new version has a bright red and green cover with photos of the Boy Scouts in action, carries a stock number of 616928 and was published in 2013, although it was not widely available until spring this year. Normally, revised posts have many changes and updates. In the case of the Guide, however, there are few significant changes. Capital headings remain unchanged, as do most of the content. The biggest difference lies in the increased emphasis on youth protection. Other updates include available training, the names of certain forms and publications, and additional committee positions. Should you go out and buy a new copy? If you always want the latest version of the posts, surely. It's only a few dollars and you'll have information that's been ongoing since last year. If not, you're fine, if you've kept up with changes in youth protection requirements, know about the Online Training Troop Committee Challenge and have a well-functioning committee. Here, then, is a chapter-by-chapter rundown on changes to the new Guide: Frontispiece Includes Youth Protection Policy Chapter 1 - Introduction Chapter 2 - The Scouting Agency Adds a Report of the Bechtel Family National Scout Reserve Clarifies that the chartered representative organization can also to multiple registration as a member of the troop committee Adds emphasis to youth protection in the paragraph on troop and charter organization Adds a footer framework for the main responsibilities of the Chapter 3 committee – How Your Scout Troop Works Changes the Term Junior Leader to Youth Leader, change in typography in troop organization chart, and adds new Bugler youth posts, Leave No Trace Trainer and Webmaster Adds a sub section on the elements of a good annual program plan and a link to the website on the topic (www.scouting.org/BoyScouts/ProgramPlanning.aspx) Chapter 4 – Organization of the Troop Committee and Responsibilities Adds bullet elements to the protection of youth in its list of responsibilities of the troop committee.
