This is especially useful if data usage is a problem or if you will be without cellular communication during your travels. Google Maps is as accurate as any other mapping service in terms of the scale and accuracy of roads. However, it should be noted that there will always be a delay between changes in real road patterns and digital map updates. Always pay attention when using any GPS navigation system. Because the app gets all the information it needs from Google's servers as needed, the app uses data. You can download areas for offline use, either to save data, or if you expect to be without mobile data for your journey. Due to Google's weak relationship with China, many Google services are blocked there. This prevents any experience of using with this app. VPNs are an option, however they are not always reliable and not good for navigation in mode Time. You should be able to use a VPN to download offline cards. The ability to have Google Maps is audible to speak directions for you as you drive is available on Android devices. This is a much safer option than constantly looking at the device while driving. The option can be easily turned on or to the right of the main screen. You can see the footpaths on the Maps. The app can also give directions only for walking, which can be selected on the route planning screen. Pedestrian walkways are more susceptible to being out of date than road maps, so always use caution before potentially invading someone's property. Google Street View is 360 degrees available in the Android version of the Maps app. The easiest way to access this feature is to find the place you want to browse, and click and hold that place. If the view of the street is available, a small miniature will appear in the bottom corner. To add multiple directions to the app, start as usual with one destination. On the route planner screen, choose a mode of transportation, then click the menu button and click Add Stop. In a new area, search for your next destination, and repeat for the rest. This app works without WiFi. It should be noted that it uses data, however. While the maps themselves are not data-specific, things like Street View and Satellite View, so be sure to keep track of your data. You can also download Offline Maps for longer use.
