Google has a lot of confusing music services, but Play Music is one of the best and now it's getting a little better. A new update rolling out in mobile and web apps brings a new emphasis on finding the music you like at the right time. The app has received a visual overhaul that reduces the emphasis on the card style interface it has been using for so long (although the web version is still pretty card-th). More importantly, the home screen app will now serve as a kind of personal DJ, suggesting that the music he considers is most relevant to you at the time. According to Google, it does this with machine learning. Play Music will pay attention when you listen to certain types of music and start offering similar music for the same time. For example, if you always work on Mondays at 6pm, the app will find out You want to get your beast playlist mode around this time and start delivering it (or music like him) to you every Monday at 6pm. If you prefer something cool and relaxing in the evenings, it will be gear shifting. It's a noble promise, so we'll be interested to see if it's actually that smart. Introducing Google's new Google Play music via Google's Android Central Music allows you to listen to your favorite tracks, albums and playlists. The service offers both individual and family subscriptions, the latter of which allows up to six people to share one subscription. As of March 2020, Google Play Music's family plan costs $14.99 a month and allows up to six members of the same household to transfer millions of tracks from their own accounts. By comparison, an individual Membership on Google Play Music costs $9.99 per month and is tied to a single Google account. All members of The Google Play Music family plan have their own music libraries and playlists. For both individual and family plans, users can use Google Play Music (which includes support to download personal music libraries) or YouTube Music, which includes music videos and more. Both services have standalone apps that also offer offline listening for premium subscribers. In addition, each user can link up to 10 devices to their account, but each account can only play music from one device at a time. To create a family plan for Google Play Music, you first need to create a Google family here's how to do it. If you haven't already, sign up for your main Google account on your desktop browser. It will be an account that controls the family plan and all related services, including Google Play Music. The family plan requires a standard Google account. You can't create a family group with a G Suite account. Go to families.google.com/families. Choose Start. You'll see that your Google account is listed as a family manager. Choose a family group Create to continue. Choose a member of the Invite family. To invite someone, enter their name or Gmail address, and then select Send. The form will be auto-filled based on your Google contacts. Alternatively, you can search through the suggested contacts. The recipient will receive an email notifying them that they have received an invitation to your family group. They will be asked to take several steps to complete the process. Repeat steps from 5 to 7 for all family members you want to add (up to five). That's it! Now you're ready to set up a Google Play Music family plan. If you've already signed up for a Google Play Music custom plan, the transition to a family plan is simple. Individual Google Play Music subscribers who have YouTube Premium (formerly YouTube Red) will lose access to the service if they are transferred to the Google Play Music family plan, but they will still have access to YouTube Music Premium. Users who want Google Play Music, YouTube Music Premium and YouTube Premium must first cancel Google Play Music and then subscribe to family plan Premium. If you haven't already, sign up for a Google account that monitors your family group through a desktop browser. It should be the same account signed up for Google Play Music. If this is not the case, you will need to cancel the existing Google Play Music service and set up a new new the main account that controls your Google family plan. Go to play.google.com/music/listen. Choose a burger menu in the top left corner. Choose your settings. Here, select the Family Update Plan and follow the steps to approve account changes. Now you're in the family plan of Google Play Music. If you don't have a paid Google Play Music or YouTube Music account, you can subscribe to the Google Play Music family plan in just a few steps. If you haven't already, create a Google family plan as above. In the desktop browser, go to play.google.com/music/listen. If necessary, sign up to your main Google account. It must be the same account that manages the family group. Choose a burger menu in the top left corner. Choose Subscribe now. Choose a family plan and follow the on-screen steps to fill in the payment details. Once completed, you'll see information about your new plan, including your monthly expenses and payment schedule. Subscription to the Google Play Music family plan also engages you in a broader Google family sharing program. All Google accounts associated with the plan will also have automatic access to purchases and services of Google Play users, such as YouTube TV. You can set up these sharing settings from the Families website. There are millions of apps available for download in the Google Play Store, many of which are monetized through ads or in-app purchases, while others may require a prepaid to install them on your smartphone or tablet. A Subscription to Google Play Pass provides instant access to hundreds of these apps, all of which are without advertising or any additional purchases required. While the types of apps available with a Google Play Pass subscription vary, the lion's share of its catalog consists of Android games. This on-demand setup is great for those who want to try different apps or have the ability to choose from hundreds of games whenever they want. Google Play Pass requires devices running Android 4.4 and above along with the Google Play Store 16.6.25 and above. The Google Play Pass subscription catalog is constantly expanding, and new names are added every month. To find out which apps and games are currently available, take the next steps. At the time of publication, Google Play Pass was only available to those Android users located in the United States. Tap the Play Store on the device's home screen. The Google Play Store interface must now be displayed. Select the Menu button, represented by three horizontal lines and located in the top left corner of the screen. When the menu slips, click Play Pass. Click more at the bottom of the screen. Click Explore. The Explore Google Play Pass interface must now be displayed, allowing you to view details, screenshots and videos for hundreds of games and other apps that included in the subscription. You may notice that many apps are accompanied by a price tag, some of them relatively expensive. Access to each of these apps is free with an active subscription. A Google Play Pass subscription costs about $5 a month, giving you unlimited access to all apps and games in the catalog. If your Google account is set up as a family manager, you can access this subscription for free with five additional users. As a family manager, it's a good idea to first consider what apps and games you provide access to if there are young kids in your Google family group. In order for your subscription to remain active, you need to support a valid payment method on Google Play. Yes, if you're unsure if Google Play Pass is right for you, we recommend choosing a 10-day free trial. If you don't want to be automatically billed, make sure you cancel your Google Play Pass subscription before the trial expires. Tap the Play Store on the device's home screen. The Google Play Store interface must now be displayed. Select the Menu button, represented by three horizontal lines and located in the top left corner of the screen. When the slide-out menu appears, click Play Pass. Click the Free Trial Launch Button. If necessary, enter Google Pay data and click SUBSCRIBE. Subscribe.
