The novel, dedicated to arthas's progression from Prince to Lich King, was released on April 21, 2009. The plot summary of the book is set over a long period, and has many duplicate scenes from other works, including Tides of Darkness, Beyond the Dark Portal, Dragon Day, Reign of Chaos, Frozen Throne and The Wrath of the Lich King. The story begins with Arthas at the age of nine, between the First and Second World Wars, with Anunin Lothar and Varian Rinne first arriving in the capital with news of the fall of Stormwind. Arthas and Varian play together, although while Varian has been trained to fight since childhood, Arthas was protected from such teachings by his father. However, when Muradin the Bronzebeaver came across Artas, battling imaginary orcs, while the Alliance forces were battling the Horde on Dranor, Muradin volunteers to train him. Arthas was later embroiled in an attempt by Ela Prestor to marry Kalia Menethil. The love triangle between Artas, Jaina Proudmoor and Kael'thas Sunstrider develops through the plot, Arthas and Jaina take part in the noble garden celebrations, the Summer Fire Festival, Hallow's End and the Winter Veil Holiday Together. Later, when Arthas begins to take on the duties of prince, he visits Durnhold Storage, seeing Thrall fighting other enemies in the gladiator arena. Kel'Thalas visit and the high elven culture is depicted. Eventually, he was introduced as a knight of the Silver Hand in the Cathedral of Light. Eventually the Third War begins. The story covers Arthas and Jaina meeting Kel'Thuzad, Arthas calling Uther a traitor and dismissing him and the Knights of the Silver Hand from service for their refusal to help in culling Stratholme. Over time, Artas' quest for revenge leads him to Frostmorn, the (obvious) demise of Mal'Ganis, and the moments leading to king Terenas' assassination and after him. The storyline continues after that moment to Jane Egwinn in Oramore. Numerous scenes from the Lich King's Wrath included along with a cameo tuskarr and taunka.
