The NYSE and Nasdaq will close at 1 p.m. the day after Thanksgiving; On Christmas Eve, if it falls on a weekday; and July 3, if both he and July 4 fall on a weekday. Bond markets are watching the same nine holidays as well as two additional holidays: Bond markets also see several early closures at 2 p.m. each year: Maundy Thursday (the day before Good Friday) Friday, the preceding Memorial DayIn the day before Independence Day is observed Black Friday (the day after Thanksgiving) Christmas Eve New Year When it comes to stock and bond markets, So, if the holiday falls on the weekend, the market closure is dictated by two rules: If the holiday falls on a Saturday, the market will close on the previous Friday.If the holiday falls on a Sunday, the market will close on the following Monday. However, both exchanges offer premarket trading hours between 4 and 9:30 a.m., as well as late trading hours between 4 and 8pm Bond markets usually trade between 8am and 5pm Why limited hours, who would like to buy and sell 24/? One of the main reasons is liquidity, which is how many purchases and sales occur at a given time. The more liquidity in a particular security, the more often you should get a fair price for it; the less liquidity, the more likely you are to settle for less than the ideal price to complete the deal. Buyers and sellers are needed to function effectively, says Charles Sizemore, director of Sizemore Capital Management. Therefore, the stock market has set the clock, which happens to correspond to the east coast working day. You want the maximum number of traders buying and selling at the same time. If you were at a real estate auction selling your grandmother's antiques, you would like a lot of bidders there. This is the same rationale in the stock market. 12 The cost of owning a Cathow to save moneyhousecats may be known for their hemishness and low-maintenance attitude, but they don't come cheap. Bond markets close at nine days when stock exchanges are silent, plus Columbus Day and Veterans Day, so they won't open on November 11. Bonds also close early (at 2 p.m.) on six occasions: Thursday before Good Friday, Friday before Remembrance Day, the day before Independence Day, Black Friday, Christmas Eve and New Year's Eve. The stock market calendar is also different from the federal federal the holiday schedule is followed by most U.S. banks. Like bond markets, the Fed celebrates Veterans Day, but it doesn't take off on Good Friday and doesn't have any officially scheduled early closing days. Stock exchanges rarely sleep long except in the rare case, three-day holiday weekends are the longest time the stock market is quiet. The exchanges have been closed for more than three days running only a few times in the last century, most recently during Superstorm Sandy in 2012 and after the 9/11 attacks in 2001. The three-day limit is not a formal policy, but rather a rule that prevents investors from creating a long downward period and creating volatility when the market reopens, said Sam Stovall, chief investment strategist at investment research firm CFRA. There's an old saying that bull markets take an escalator while bear markets take a lift. Stovall says. Since fear is more motivator than greed, I think investors don't want to be denied access to their money for too long. Otherwise they end up taking money off the table, especially if some unnerving event occurred while the exchange was closed. In 2020, bond markets will be closed or closed on the NYSE and Nasdaq holidays listed above. They will also be closed in dates below: Monday, October 12 (Columbus Day). Wednesday, November 11 (Veterans Day). In addition, bond markets are closed or will close at 14:00 et on Thursday, April 9 (Monday). Friday, May 22 (Friday before Memorial Day). Thursday, July 2 (the day before the observed Independence Day). Friday, November 27 (the day after Thanksgiving). Thursday, December 24 (Christmas Eve) and Thursday, December 31 (New Year). 2020-05-26 18:26:43 Peter Hanks, stock market analyst holidays can create a unique trading environment where an unusual price action can occur due to lack of liquidity. Trading gaps, sudden crashes and seasonal trends such as Black Friday are among the most notable events related to the holiday and the phenomena that can make trading during these periods difficult to strive for. With that in mind, check out the stock market holiday calendar for various major equity markets around the world.
