Who is hecate in macbeth

Hecate is the goddess of witchcraft, and one can see her as the ruler of the Three Witches. In Act 3, Scene 5, Hecate appears before witches and demands to know why she was excluded from their encounter with Macbeth. He tells them that Macbeth will return to know his destiny and declares that he will see revelations that will be the force of their illusion to lead him to the conclusion that he is safe. She plays an important role in the game because of the lines she utes at the end of the scene: And you all know security/ She's mortals' greatest enemy. She reveals in these lines that Macbeth's belief that he is untouchable will ultimately result in his downfall. For a detailed examination of Hecate and the theory that she is not Shakespeare's work, see Macbeth Glossary (1.1). For information on pronunciation and mythology, see macbeth's glossary (4.1). The beetle is shardy because it flies on scaly wings and the hum of its flight is the night's howling, the sound of the night, which tells us it's time to sleep. But in Macbeth's mind, it's also time for death and black magic, because the beetle responds to the call of Hecate, who dwells in the underworld and is a security guard for witches. [Detailed summary of the scene] After the spirit of Banquo appears at Macbeth's banquet, Macbeth tells his wife that he will visit the witches again to learn the worst that can happen. In the next scene Hecate enters the crackling Thunder (3.5.1, s.d.). She let three witches know she was mad at them because they wouldn't let her take the lead in their dealings with Macbeth. She then tells them that they will deceive Macbeth into destroying him. [Detailed summary of the scene] After the witches get their pot of cooking problems, Hecate congratulates and thanks them, saying: Oh well done! I commend your pain (4.1.39). Then he leads them in song and dance. However, all shakespeare's editors agree that everything from Hecate's entry to her departure is false. Bless and exaggerated, how dare you do business and trade macbeth 5In riddles and things of death, and I, the mistress of your charm, close to the repentant of all harm, have I never been called to bear my part or show the glory of our art? 10A, even worse, all you did was for the wayward son, mischievous and angry, who, like others, loves for his own purposes, not for you. But now fix it. Get out, 15a in the pit of Acheron Come with me in the morning. That's where he'll know his fate. Your vessels and spells provide your charm and everything else. 20I'm for air. I will spend this night until the gloomy and mortal end. There's got to be a big deal before noon. On the corner of the moon hangs a vap'rous drop deep. 25I'll catch him before he gets to the ground. And that distilled magic tricks will lift such artificial elves as the force of their illusion, draw him to his confusion. I have no reason to be angry, you disobedient witches? How dare you give Macbeth riddles and prophecies about his future without telling me? I'm your boss and the source of your powers. I'm the one who secretly decides what bad things happen, but you never called me to join in and show off my own powers. What's worse, you've done all this for a man who acts like a spoiled brat, angry and hateful. Like all spoiled sons, he's chasing what he wants, and he doesn't care about you. But you can make it up to me. Go away and meet me in the morning in a pit by the river in hell. Macbeth will go there to learn his fate. You wear kittens, magic, charm and everything else. I'm going to leave. I'm going to spend tonight working to make something terrible happen. I've got a lot of work to do before noon. From the corner of the moon hangs an important droplet. I'll catch him before he falls to the ground. When I survive the spells, the drop will create magical spirits that will trick Macbeth with illusion. illusion.
