Western scholars used to project the Greeks as advanced in modern thinking or philosophical thinking. This is true only after they have come into contact with the Hindus. We see this from the period of Pythagoras and Socrates, which appeared in the world only after the Period of Upanishad. The Greeks, Egyptians and Sumerians had similar ideas about magic, witchcraft, and ghosts that had been in the Vedas at least a thousand years before them. There are similarities in Atarva Veda, Sumerian and Egyptian literature. I will only take one set of beliefs for comparison in this article: How to destroy enemies or evil spirits? All ancient people believed that they could eliminate their enemies or evil spirits through curses. They also believed they could destroy statues or dolls of their enemies and eliminate them. They thought they could bury something like hair, magic plates or mascots in the residences of their enemies and subdue them. Kawachams are a genre of hymns where God prays to protect every part of the body. In addition, they pray for the elimination of their enemies and counteract the actions of the black magic of the enemy. The most famous Tamil kavacha is Kanta Shasty Kawacham, who prays to God Scande, Shiva's son. This specifically refers to the enemies of the act of burying dolls, cat hair, bones, hair and nails of children, etc. The scans pray to neutralize such things and Against all ghosts, spirits, ghouls, etc. It shows that this is an age-old faith; maybe a few thousand years. This belief spread to different parts of the world when Vedic Hindus spread to different parts of the world. To ward off the evil eye, an ugly figure hung in all the palaces or houses of Hindus. It's called the Dhorstie Doll. It can be found in all other cultures. The Sumerian beliefs of Magic have been used to ward off demons, to undo the bad effects of some sinful actions, to counteract the potential consequences of some foreshadowed effects, to increase sexual potency, to ensure a loved one's favor, to soothe a flurry of babies and to thwart the activities of hostile sorcerers (all in Hindu mantras/spells) Schumer people wore ugly figures similar to ugly dolls. The puzzle was a Sumerian demon. They hung him at the entrance to the houses like Hindus. Hattical and Hittite culture were the sources for all these beliefs. These were the Kshatriyas that migrated from India. Akkadian had the rituals of namburba's spell to ward off evil. Some aspects of them were made at night, like the Hindu rituals of black magic. The Hindus did it at night. Sumerian spells are similar to the spells/mantras of Atarva Veda. (I've already shown that even the most popular symbol of Valentine's Day arrow is piercing the heart from Atharva Veda). Bes image of Egyptian beliefs are the magical rituals that are most easily understood involving the involvement of deflecting enemies by cursing formulas (similar to Veda). They are accompanied by the ritual destruction of wax or clay figures (even now it is done by magicians in Kerala) a ritual designed to defeat Apep's cosmic enemies and political enemies, also individuals, were essentially similar in nature. Some Greek-Egyptian spells cause evil gods and demons to appear in man's nightmares. The magic has been used for benign purposes as well. A love potion was given to a wanted man or woman with spells (as in Athrva Veda). Mascots, amulets and happy charms have also been used to bring happiness to the owner. A huge number of amulets representing gods and goddesses, parts of the body replica were extracted from Egyptian burials. Magic spells written on papyrus were also used as amulets. Hindus have also done so. They put such magic spells in metal containers and hung around their necks. Isis was a goddess, she was often treated. Without was a curious dwarf, whose hideous traits epitomize the mixture of fear and favor of the supernatural world. Bes at the Louvre Museum, Paris Bes Bes' ugliness is a crime from evil. He appears with a large bearded and barely human face, a thick body, arms and short bandy-legs. He wears a crown with feathers and often wields a short sword. He's Him. Lion mania usually has its mouth open and tongue protruding. He is also treated like a dancing musician. As was absorbed by Greco - Roman culture. The Greeks portrayed him in a strong and typhallic (straight penis) guise. (This compares to a Dhursti Hindu doll or Ayyanar/Sast, a village God with a sword and a protruding language in villages in southern India). Bes was a protective deity, usually portrayed as a hideous but hilarious dwarf. He was revered as the god of pleasure and entertainment and as a protector of the family, especially children and women at the birth of a child Hekkate in Greece Hekkata is a corrupt form of Sakti in Sanskrit. Goddess of witchcraft living in the Underworld. There she observed ritual cleansing, as well as magical appeals. Witches like Medea drew strength from the goddess. Hekkate sometimes appeared on the ground at night, especially at a crossroads, accompanied by naked hounds. (Hindus are afraid to cross the intersection of three roads, especially at night, and they believe that evil spirits occupy these places. Where the paths met, the triple figure of Hecate rose from the masks placed at the junction. Suggestions were left on the side of the road of the shrine and at intersections. In some parts of Greece it was worshipped by occult gangs and fans of the moon. (Vedic Hindus believed in the path of the god Busan.
