His landscapes are almost entirely of the sites in the Chads ford and Bransweyne area of Pennsylvania and in the coastal state of Maine, and the places he grew up and lived all his life. Wyeth's close friends and neighbors and their homes were often the subject of his intense lycee portraits. Olson-Christina Olson in particular, who appears in his most famous paintings, Christina's World, 1948 (Museum of Modern Art, New York) - has been photographed and their farm repeatedly by the artist. Wyeth's interior and architectural views often focus on windows and entrances, and the wind from the sea is one of the artist's oldest paintings from the window. It's a view from a room on the top floor of Olson's house in Maine, looking at the surrounding landscape. The wind from the sea, painted a year before Christina's world, captures a moment on a hot summer day when Wyeth opens a window that is rarely used in the attic room. The picture is dreadfully alive with movement and wind blowing curtains in the room. The tattered and transparent fabric is light and air-ready, with small birds embroidered along the edges that seem ready to rush into the house. In contrast, the sun's bleached wooden window sill looks strong and sturdy. Inside the room, faint, while the landscape behind the open window was stark and bright. The tree-lined view does not include any numbers, but as in many other works done by Wyeth, there is a strong sense of its obvious existence. Two well-worn tire tracks run across the dirt leading the viewer's eye towards the sea in the distance. A close point of view and a tightly cropped window frame on the edge of the painting create the illusion that the viewer is actually looking out of the window. Wind from the sea is an iconic example of the landscape in Wyeth, as well as one of the oldest examples of its use of windows and its often unique selection from a point of view. The gift was accompanied by three preparatory studies for the painting. All four works were inherited to the exhibition by Charles H. Morgan Wind from the Sea is the second painting by Wyeth to enter the National Gallery collection. In 1977, snow boards were given, a painting that was completed in 1953.
