History develops at a time of great social upheaval in Kerala society, where the backward agrarian feudal society (state) drifted towards the modern liberal, socialist and democratic society (politics). The late 1940s and early 1950s were a period of radical change in which the working class gained power and broke away from the clutches of its feudal overlords and supporters there, such as monarchs, dictators and oligarchs. During this period, the walls of caste, religious divisions and other racial segregation began to leave the mainstream. The changes that had taken place during that period had ushered in an era of socio-economic progress, and Kerala had become a developed and enterprising society. Thakazhi is one of the most prolific left-leaning writers of the 1940s and 50s. His subjects were ordinary people from the lower part of society. His writings reflected the struggle and progress of these so-called outsiders. Most of his subjects are people from his neighborhood, mostly Kuttanad, a place believed to be a bowl of Kerala rice. The heroes of this story are agricultural workers from Kuttanad, who are at the lower levels of the caste hierarchy. It clearly describes the injustice and oppression faced by these people on the part of their masters for generations. Left-wing labor movements in the late 1940s allowed them to organize into trade unions and start strikes there, challenging the status quo and making themselves visible to thw society and, in particular, to the statehood of a fledgling democracy. I will rate this book 4/5 for its simplicity. It also reminded us of the dark past we all once had, and our path of progress we made as a society. ...
