If you need to create a video to work with, or you just like to do it for fun, you'll enjoy the convenience of having all these tools in one place. ProsAdding and Organization: When you're ready to make a movie, your first step will be to choose what type of files to add. Options include video, audio, image, icon, and lyrics. You can add all and all of them to the same project and then move them around on the timeline until you have them where you want them. And if you are new to this type of program, a handy movie wizard to guide you through the process. Direct publication: When you think you have all your clips, images and other files in place, you can view your movie directly from the main app interface. And if you're happy with what you're seeing, all you have to do is click the button to post on YouTube to get the video online. In addition, you can keep the finished product on your computer to download or distribute later. Design ConsInterface: While the interface layout is clear and functional, the color scheme definitely leaves much to be desired. Many texts are in gray or brown inscriptions on a black background, and some menus are even light gray on dark gray, making them almost impossible to read. There are several skins available for this program as well, and they all have the same problems in at least some parts of the interface. Bottom LineYouTube Movie Maker is a convenient and flexible tool that will help you create videos that you can directly publish online. The free version does put a 5-minute timeline on the video, but there is no limit to how much video you can make or how long you can use the program for, and there is no watermark on the published videos.
