If you're editing multiple sheets in Microsoft Excel, it might be helpful to group them together. This allows you to make changes to the same range of cells in multiple sheets. Here's how to do it. Grouping multiple sheets in Microsoft Excel Grouping sheets together in Excel can be useful if you have an Excel work book with multiple sheets that contain different data but follow the same layout. The example below shows this in action. Our Excel workbook, called School Data, contains several sheets related to the school's operation. Three sheets have student lists for different classes, called Class A, Class B, and Class C. If we group these sheets together, any actions we perform on any of these sheets will be applied to all of them. For example, let's say we want to insert the IF formula into the G4 (G4 to G12) column on each sheet to determine whether students were born in 1998 or 1999. If we group the sheets together before inserting the formula, we can apply it to the same cell range on all three sheets. ANSWER: How to use the logical features in Excel: IF, AND, OR, XOR, NOT To group worksheets together, click and hold the Ctrl key and click on every sheet you want to group together at the bottom of the Excel window. Grouped sheets are displayed with a white background, while unselected sheets appear in gray. The example below shows the IF formula we suggested above, inserted into the Class B sheet. Grouping all the sheets in Microsoft Excel When you press and lash Ctrl, you can select a few separate sheets and group them together. If you have a lot more book, however, it's impractical. If you want to group all the sheets in the Excel work book, you can save time by correctly clicking on one of the sheets listed at the bottom of the Excel window. Click here to select all the sheets to group all the sheets together. By not grouping worksheets into Microsoft Excel Once you've finished making changes to multiple sheets, you can ungroup them in two ways. The quickest method is to click on the selected sheet at the bottom of the Excel window and then click Nongroup Sheets. You can also ungroup individual sheets one at a time. Simply click and hold Ctrl, and then select the sheets you want to remove from the group. The tabs of the sheet that you ungroup will return to the gray background. A range is a group or block of cells in a sheet that are selected or highlighted. In addition, the range can be a group or a block of cell links as an argument for a feature used to create a graph or used for these bookmarks. Information in this article relates to Excel 2019, 2016, 2013, 2010, Excel Online and Excel versions for Mac. An adjacent range of cells is a group of dedicated cells that are adjacent to each other, such as the C1 to C5 range shown in the image above. The non-continual range consists of two or more separate blocks of cells. These blocks can be separated by rows or columns, as shown in the A1 to A5 and C1 to C5 bands. Both adjacent and non-adjacent ranges can include hundreds or even thousands of cells and flying sheets and workbooks. The ranges are so important in Excel and Google tables that names can be given to certain ranges to make them easier and reused when referenced in charts and formulas. When cells have been selected, they are surrounded by a contour or boundary. By default, this circuit or boundary surrounds only one cell in a sheet at a time, which is known as an active cell. Changes in the sheet, such as editing or formatting data, affect the active cell. When you select a range of multiple cells, changes in the sheet, with a few exceptions, such as data entry and editing, affect all cells in the selected range. Jurmin Tang/EyeEm/Getty Images There are several ways to choose the range in the sheet. These include the use of a mouse, keyboard, the name of the box, or a combination of the three. To create a range consisting of adjacent cells, drag with your mouse or use a combination of Shift and four arrow keys on the keyboard. Use a mouse and keyboard or just a keyboard to create ranges that are not adjacent to cells. When you enter a number of cell links as an argument for a function or when creating a chart, in addition to entering the range manually, the range can also be selected by pointing. The ranges are identified by cell references or cell addresses in the upper left and lower right corners of the range. These two references are separated by the colon. The colon says Excel to include all the cells between these starting and end points. At times the range of terms and array seems to be used interchangeably for Excel and Google Sheets because both terms involve the use of multiple cells in a work book or file. To be precise, the difference is that the range refers to the choice or identification of multiple cells (such as A1:A5), and the array refers to the values located in those cells (e.g. 1;2;5;4;3). Some features, such as SUMPRODUCT and INDEX, accept arrays as arguments. Other features, such as SUMIF and COUNTIF, only accept ranges for arguments. This does not mean that a number of cell links cannot be entered as arguments for SUMPRODUCT INDEX. These features remove values from the range and transfer them to an array. For example, formulas both return the result to 69, as shown in the E1 and E2 cells in the image. On the other hand, SUMIF and COUNTIF do not accept arrays as arguments. Thus, while the formula below returns the answer to 3 (see E3 cell in the image), the same formula with the array will not be accepted. COUNTIF (A1:A5 As a result, the program displays a message box listing possible problems and fixes.
