Download While streaming music seems to be the most popular choice nowadays, there is still a large subset of people who prefer music stored locally. If you're into local music, here are the best players for Android. Best for most people: Google Play Music (free) Do you know how they say that the best camera is the one you have with you? Well in this case, the same applies to the music players-Google Play Music ships on almost every Android phone out there, and it turns out that it's also a damn solid choice for playing local music. It offers an intuitive interface, library support, playlists and even an equalizer to make your tunes sound the way you do. As an added bonus if you're into podcasts, Google Play Music has a built-in podcatcher so you can handle all your music and podcast needs from the same app. It's very convenient. Also, if you ever decide to make the switch to a streaming package, you can just go with Play Music All Access and your local and streaming music in the same place. It's a win-win situation. Best for local playback: Pulsar (free/$2.99) or BlackPlayer (free/$3.29) If something about using Play Music rubs you the wrong way or it just feels too mess with podcast support and all that, then you'll love Pulsar and BlackPlayer. We usually try to select one app for each category, but both of them are amazing apps. It was too hard to pick just one. Pulsar Appearance of each application is very similar, with each offer Album, Track, and genre view in a swipeable interface. Pulsar also has an folders view, so you can see exactly how your music is stored on your device. Both apps also have an on-board equalizer, as well as various playback features such as bottomless and cross-side. You'll find theme support in both apps, apps, BlackPlayer offers more customization options. If that's what you're after, then you can take a closer look at BlackPlayer first. BlackPlayer Both apps offer free ((Pulsar/BlackPlayer) and paid versions. For paid versions, the Pulsar Pro comes in at $2.99, and BlackPlayer EX at $3.29. Paid versions offer things like more themes, better calling, and some additional customization options. Best for cloud music: CloudPlayer (free/$7.99) it may be a stretching local music thing just a bit, but if you prefer to have your music stored in Dropbox, Google Drive, or OneDrive, there's no reason you shouldn't be able to stream it directly from these places. what you're after, then CloudPlayer is the music player for you. It not only offers access to Drive, Dropbox or OneDrive directories, but also doesn't skimp on the features you'd expect from a music player. You'll find no replay clearances, volume normalization, Last.fm, equalizer, and more together for the ride. CloudPlater supports themes as well as several other interface-based settings, such as user navigation views and lock screen views. The hardest hurdle to go when it comes to CloudPlayer is the price: to get a full set of features, you'll have to shell out $7.99, which is quite expensive for the app. At least you can try it for 30 days before you make a decision. And that's less than a month of typical music streaming subscriptions. Subscription.
