We seem to be in a gold animation age type; not only is computer animation capable of creating truly brilliant worlds, but also the long production schedules of these movies are forcing filmmakers to craft superb screens before even beginning. This week we have two animated movies, plus a few other films that have taken place in doom or real worlds. On the other side of the coin, we have some ultra-realistic movies from the 1970s and 1980s, telling their stories of chaos and misfit. At the end, we have a on a real, but utterly reality, relationship between a famous director and an unfamous actor. The best of what's new on NetflixHow in Your Dragon Tren 2★ ★ ★ ☆ One of the last Oscar candidates for best animated feature, How to Train Your Dragon 2 (2014) is the unanimously terrifying sequence of the 2010 original, based on the books by Cressida Cowell. The new movie is even more brilliant, achieving an amazing sense of flying, stopping, diving, height, height, wind, speed, and sky open. The story involves the defending new dragon-friendly village viking in Berk from a new band of dragon-rustlers. The young characters are now older and have to deal with more grown-up issues of love and loss. Jay Baruchel returns as the voice of Hiccup Hero, and Cate Blanchett is on board as the voice of his mother wandering time, giving a far-moving performance. Kristen Wiig, Jonah Hill, T.J. Miller, and Christopher Mintz-Ranking provide silly support. K-PAX★ ★ ★ ☆ ☆ Certainly a bit formula, Iain Softley's K-PAX (2001) nevertheless is not on the charm, skill, and charismatic of his two stars, Kevin Spaces and Jeff Bridges. Space Play Prot, which claims to be an alien to the planet K-PAX and is engaged in a psychiatric institute. It is apparently able to see far beyond our normal color spectrum, and wear sunglasses throughout the movie. Bridges plays his doctor, psychiatrist Dr Mark Powell, who must solve the puzzle whether Prot is a real alien before July 27, when Prot says he plans to leave the earth. Meanwhile, Prot's odd behavior comes across as useful and eye-open to other patients, and he even manages to heal some of them. It's a light-weight entertainment, feel-good entertainment tonight, perfect for streaming. Alfre Woodard and Mary McCormack co-stars. Look fast to break Aaron Bad's Paul Pierce into a small, early role. Groundhog Day★ ★ ★ ★ ★ Though he saw it as just a normal romantic comedy of his day (released in February, for Valentine's Day weekend), Harold Ramiss's Groundhog Day (1993) went on to achieve status as a U.S. ruler and an object of fascination for many. (Scholars from many of the world's religions remarks that the movie's theme and ideals perfectly line up with their own beliefs.) Bill Murray gives one of his best performances, a perfectly balanced mix of cynical and sweet, as weather television Connors, who reluctantly, thoroughly travels to Punxsutawney, Pennsylvania, to cover the Groundhog Day events. Unfortunately, he woke up the next day and discovered that it's still February 2, and over and over. He goes through an incredible variety of responses to this repeat of the day's events, and eventually uses his infinite amount to become a better person and win the hand of his producer, Rita (Andie MacDowell). Chris Elliott, Stephen Tobolowsky, and Brian provide funny support, and Ramis appears as a neurologist. Three Days Drive ★ ★ ★ ☆ ☆ the 1970s discussed the best decades for political grounds and clemency spies, and Sydney Pollack's three-day Kondo (1975), based on James Grady's novels, is one reason why. Robert Redford plays an unusual character for this genre. It is Joseph Turner, employed by the CIA, but his job is to not jump out of airplanes or get into car chas; rather, he read spy novels and seek exciting plots, ideas, and tricks. When the bad guy storms his office and kills everyone, Turner must use all his knowledge to hit the streets and stay alive. Faye Dunaway provides cover for one of the best escapes. The film has huge, edgy, gritty feels and some of the sub-term politics are still fairly important. Max von Sydow is a sine presence as an enemy killer. This was the fourth movie that Pollack did with Redford. Don't miss these on Hulu PlusFitzarraldo★ ★ ★ ★ ☆ Hulu Plus recently added a whole steel to Werner Herzog movies, including Fitzcarraldo (1982), which is easily either famous or enfam in all of his movies. Klaus Kinski plays the title character, who real name is Brian Fitzgerald; he's a failed tire man who dreamed of building an operation in the forest so that Caruso can come up with lyrics for their natives. He plans to do so by navigating a massive boat to a point where two streams almost converge, then drag it onto land and build the opera house from it. Herzog, never a man they sympmis away in a chance of testing nature, actually had his crew drag the boat to the ground, creating all kinds of problems. The movie is long, but it's pounding with a rare kind of honesty and unbelievable. Documented to equally absorb on the making of this film, The Burden Blank Line of Dreams (1982), also available on Hulu Plus. Best Fiend★ ★ ★ ★ ☆ Director Werner Herzog made five movies with Klaus Kinski, and given that both had reputations for being quite passionate and volatile, it only makes sense that they would not only cooperate, but also cut into very large ways. A few years after Kinski's death in 1991, Herzog made this documentary about their work relationship. Herzog described him as his coward half, half maniac, claim to have threatened him with a shooter once, and admitted that some of the legends on him might have made up. Sometimes, it seems as if a better waivers could have been done on Kinski by someone else, since Herzog is so close to his subject, but at the same time, that makes my best Fiend (1999) very entertaining. It has clips of Aguirre, The Wrath of God (1972), Woyzeck (1978), Nosferatu (1979), Fitzcarraldo (1982), and Cobra Verde (1988), and will inspire newborns to fetch them. (Three of them, Nosferatu, Fitzcarraldo, and Cobra Verde, are available on Hulu Plus.) Amazing movies about Amazon Prememood Indigo★★★★☆ The celebrated music video and film director Michel Gondry seems to have a weakness to misfit romantic living in very fan worlds. There, weird and beautiful images cover their characters and make them seem innocent. Romain Duris plays the rich, happy Colin, who lives with his personal chef (Omar Sy) and his pianocktail (a piano that makes different cocktails based on which scores are played). Colin falls in love with Chloe (Audrey Tautou), but during their honey, he gets sick; a water lily begins growing inside her lungs and she must be enthusiastated by flowering flowers running behind her away. But the love story only grows more tragic. In his best film (Eternal Sunshine of the Spotless Leader), Gondry's story are rooted and have a satisfying depth, but Mood Indigo (2014) threatens to drive, spiraling away from space. Amidst images of useful muscles and talking food with the sounds of Duke Ellington music, the curious imagery will continue to catch the imagination, if not the heart. Choice movies on CrackleFat City★★★★★ In the fourth decade of his career, John Huston led one of his best, but probably the least celebrated movie, The Fat City (1972). It's a boxing movie, but rather than the usual story of a challenge that gets his shot at the championship, it's the story of those fighters who start at the bottom and stay there. Stacy Keach plays Tully, an aging box who tails on his big coming from a barstool. Susan Tyrrell received an Oscar nomination for her bold performance as a secluded barrier that falls for him.Jeff Bridges is terrific as a fresh-introverted boxer who Tully takes under his wing, though luck is to spare short. Huston and cinematographer Conrad L. Hall use real Stockton locations to brilliant effects, putting the low-down characters in oven gymnastics, bad coffee shops, and single bars, with no visible expectations or escape. Leonard Gardner wrote the screen, based on his own novels. The best of VuduPenguins in Madagascar★★★★☆ It's been evident since Madagascar's first film that these dishes, marginal penguins have been the best and entertaining thing in the series. So, after receiving their own television show, the waddling four wisecrackers have altered their first feature film, and even though the Penguins of Madagascar (2014) weren't a giant hits-sized or an Oscar-nomine, it was one of the funniest flat-out and fastest of all the kids' 2014 films. The four penguins are a well-oil car, such as a small, tuxedoed version of Indiana Jones, James Bond, and Etan Hunt rolled up in a beautiful and cudly packet. In this movie they face a villainous octopus about destroying all penguins in the world out of spite. Nothing the Penguins couldn't handle, except that a new super-team, called North Van, cause a fight and more than a few plans which were laid down. John Malkovich, Benedict Cumberbatch, and Werner Herzog (!) are among the top talented voice shows, but it's our katsome (Tom McGrath, Chris Miller, Christopher Knights, and Conrad Vernon) who steal the show once again.
