The question: Arthas: Rise of the Lich King: Christie Golden: 10.5 - 17 pounds, 2010: 416, 10.5 and 17 pounds Frostmourne. It was caught in a steamy, uneven piece of ice, running along the length of the blade, glowing cool blue. Beneath it was some dais, standing on a large gently raised mound, which was covered with dust of snow. The soft light, and from somewhere high above where the cave was open to daylight, shone down on the runeblade. The ice prison hid some details of the shape and shape of the sword, exaggerated others. It was uncovered and hidden at the same time, and all the more tempting as a new lover imperfectly glimpsed through a bright curtain. Arthas knew the blade - it was a sword he had seen in his dream when he first arrived. The sword, which did not kill the Invincible, but which returned it, healed and healthy. At the time, he thought it was a good omen, but now he realized that it was a real sign. That was what he came to find. This sword will change everything. Arthas stared intently at him, his hands almost physically sore to grab him, fingers to wrap himself around the handle, hands to feel the weapon swinging smoothly in a blow that would end Mal'Ganis, the end of the torment he visited on the people of Lordaeron, the end of this thirst for revenge. Drawn, he stepped forward. The supernatural elementary spirit drew its ice sword. Turn away before it's too late, it's vents. His evil is a legend. Lord of the Undead Scourge, owner of the runeblade Frostmourne, and the enemy of the free peoples of Azeroth. The Lich King is the essence of incalculable power and unprecedented malice - his icy soul, completely absorbed in his plans to destroy his life on... WORLD WARCRAFT But that wasn't always the case. Long before his soul was merged with the ok shaman Ner'zhul, the lich king was Arthas Menethil, Crown Prince of Lordaeron and faithful paladin of the Silver Hand. When the plague of the undead threatened everything he loved, Arthas was banished to continue the ill-fated search runeblade powerful enough to save his homeland. However, the object of his search will take a high price from his new master, starting a terrifying descent into the curse. Arthas's path will lead him through the Arctic northern waste to the Frozen Throne, where he will finally face the darkest fates. This article needs additional quotes to verify. The novel, dedicated to Arthas's progression from Prince to Lich King, was released on April 21, 2009. The plot summary of the book is set over a long period, and has many duplicate scenes from other works, including Tides of Darkness, Beyond the Dark Portal, Dragon Day, Reign of Chaos, Frozen Throne and The Wrath of the Lich King. However, while the scenes themselves remain the same, they are tested from an alternative perspective. The story begins with Arthas at the age of nine, between the First and Second World Wars, with Anunin Lothar and Varian Rinne first arriving in the capital with news of the fall of Stormwind. Arthas and Varian play together, although while Varian has been trained to fight since childhood, Arthas was protected from such teachings by his father. However, when Muradin the Bronzebeaver came across Artas, battling imaginary orcs, while the Alliance forces were battling the Horde on Dranor, Muradin volunteers to train him. Arthas was later embroiled in an attempt by Ela Prestor to marry Kalia Menethil. The love triangle between Artas, Jaina Proudmoor and Kael'thas Sunstrider develops through the plot, Arthas and Jaina take part in the noble garden celebrations, the Summer Fire Festival, Hallow's End and the Winter Veil Holiday Together. Later, when Arthas begins to take on the duties of prince, he visits Durnhold Storage, seeing Thrall fighting other enemies in the gladiator arena. Kel'Thallas visit and the high elven culture is depicted. Eventually, he was introduced as a knight of the Silver Hand in the Cathedral of Light. Eventually the Third War begins. The story covers Arthas and Jaina meeting Kel'Thuzad, Arthas calling Uther a traitor and dismissing him and the Knights of the Silver Hand from service for their refusal to help in culling Stratholme. Over time, Artas' quest for revenge leads him to Frostmorn, the (obvious) demise of Mal'Ganis, and the moments leading to king Terenas' assassination and after him. The storyline continues after that, to Jane and Egwinn in Tjoramore. Numerous scenes from the Lich King's Wrath included along with a cameo tuskarr and taunka. Interesting facts can be noted the fact that there are some differences in the plots of the book and the game itself. For example, in the game (as in Warcraft III, and in World of Warcraft), Arthas does not approach the lying and wounded Muradin, and without a drop of doubt and remorse leaves, leaving him to die. In the book, On the contrary, Arthas approached Muradin, wanted to help him and even heal him, but when he saw the Ice Sorrow, Arthas took the sword and left.
