house. This French-style mansion, originally a private house of industrial Charles F. Sternberg, was built in the late 19th century and eventually transformed into a 28-room luxury hotel. Today it's one of the best in Buffalo, with a fleet of renovated rooms, salmon and a brown palette filled with modern furniture and origin details such as grand fireplaces. Public areas take a more period-style feel with elaborate ceilings and fireplaces, although they have also been upgraded with bright colors and smart furniture. Buffalo wings, practically a staple of bars across the United States, originated here at Anchor Bar. Despite the huge claim of fame, this place is certainly not pretentious; Instead, it feels like a combination of a barn and a diving bar. Red ceilings, black-and-white checkered floors, and a whole bunch of odd merchandise hanging on the walls only continue with a low-key vibe. Wings come in different heat levels: light, medium, hot, spicy hot barbecue, and suicidal. Audiard's A Prophet, a (trust me-it's riveting) 149-minute prison drama starring a charismatic young unknown named Tahar Rahim that had a gala crowd at the elegant old Elgin Theater on his feet whooping, clapping, whistling and making something other kind of joyful noise for so long that stunned and grinning Rahim wisecracking George Clooney provided the first hit press conference for Jason Reitman very well up in the Air, which also stars Vera Farmiga, Jason Bateman, and Anna Kendrick, who equates a mash-up of two-time new genres, mordant romantic comedy and heart-wring satire in the country's economic crisis at its cruelest. Clooney plays a guy who fires people's lives, flying across the country from one paralyzed company to another. He received most of the questions [after the selection q&a], one of which stopped all his tracks. How has the recession affected your life? asked aussie journo. Looking at her in disbelief, he told drily, I had to fire six of my drivers. I have nine. As for the second hit glamour? That would be Farmiga, giving all the goosebumps as she swanned across the lobby of the Sutton Hotel after a few hours swathed in a white, one-shoulder, Grecian-inflected column to dress her way to the movie at her gala.
