It was held for the first time in 2017, and is being held alongside the Ivy women's tournament, also presented in 2017, at the same venue. The overall event is currently on the market as Ivy Madness. The Ivy League was the last NCAA Division I conference without a postseason tournament. The tournament follows a form of elimination that includes the top four schools in the standings at the end of the regular season. Two semi-final games are held on the first day (Saturday) with the No 1 seed playing the No 4 seed and the No 2 seed playing the No 3 seed, followed by the championship game played the following day (Sunday). This form of schedule mimics much of the conference season, where road trips typically consist of two games at two locations on Friday and Saturday (or Saturdays and Sundays) to minimize the time spent by the classes. Therefore, the tournament has the tagline The Ultimate Back-To-Back. The tournament winner receives the automatic tournament bid in the NCAA Division I men's basketball tournament. [1] A regular-season champion who fails to win the tournament will be invited to the National Invitation Tournament, per NCAA policy for regular-season champions, in case fail to receive an NCAA offer. Before the tournament, the Ivy League's automatic bid for the NCAA tournament was awarded to the conference champion as determined by the regular season standings. In case of a draw between two teams, a game was used to determine which team will receive the championship bid in the NCAA tournament. This happened on eight occasions. In 2001-02, three teams, two game tournaments took place when three teams tied for the league title. The first two tournaments (2017 and 2018) were held at Palestra on the campus of the University of Pennsylvania in Philadelphia. The 2019 tournament was held at Yale University. On February 27, 2019, the Ivy League announced that the tournament will continue to rotate annually through the remaining member schools until 2025. The 2020 tournament was due to be held at Harvard, but due to the COVID-19 pandemic, that year's tournament was canceled and the Yale Championship Champion was honored with the league's automatic bid in the NCAA tournament. [2] After years it will be hosted by Princeton, Brown, Cornell, Dartmouth and Columbia.
