Your fireplace needs regular care and cleaning to ensure safe and efficient fire. Creosote, a flammable resin-like substance that accumulates in the chimney and chimney, should be removed by a professional, eliminating concerns about at least one potential fire hazard. Give your fireplace and its routine cleaning accessories throughout the season of wood burning to eliminate the accumulation of soot, ash and creosote resins. Advertising Here are some tips for cleaning: Vacuum or dust hearth area weekly to prevent dust and soot accumulation. Do not sweep or vacuum until all the coals have been extinguished for at least 12 hours. Burn only season, well-dried wood to minimize the dangerous accumulation of creosote. Inspect the fire box, chimney and chimney annually to accumulate creosote. Do not use water to drown the fire unless there is an emergency. This will make the paste out of the ashes, which is difficult to remove. Never use an abrasive detergent inside the fireplace. Many leave flammable residues. When cleaning the fireplace, sprinkle the damp coffee grounds over the chilled ash to keep the dust down. With those tips in mind, let's go in more detail about cleaning different parts of your fireplace: This site is not available in your country This site is not available in your country Running cost: $10,000-$50,000 Home Based: Can be managed from home. Part-time: can work part-time. Are franchises available? No online operation? No wood-burning, gas, and alternative fuels - you can sell and install all of these types of home fireplaces if you consider starting a sale and fireplace installation business. The best way to work and market this kind of new business is with the help of a fully operating fireplace showroom. There are hundreds of fireplace options, mantelpiece options and fireplace accessories for homeowners to choose from, and the retail showroom is the best way to show these products and build customer interest.
