Then you're in the right place! Once, much gone, I bought a tube of fusible Perler beads from Ikea. We tried them, but none of the kids were very interested. So they went back to the closet where they sat, unused and disliked for years, and years. Now fast forward seven years. One day, after weeks of summer vacation, when I was about to give up and just plug them permanently into the playstation, if that's all that stopped the fighting, one of the guys spotted the tub and said can we use them? and this was the beginning of the school holidays perler miracle bead! This post contains affiliate links. If you buy something through one of these links I get a small commission at no extra cost to you. After years of turning up their noses at perler beads, suddenly my kids were obsessively searching for new perler bead ideas to try. I counted my blessings after a quiet afternoon of content pattern and ironing. I wasn't sure what to think when he took them out again the next day, and the next. And by the fifth day I was hailing it as a complete miracle. All four children happily create, share, and help each other! It was awesome! What are these miracle Perler beads? The tiny (and I mean tiny) colorful beads that you can arrange from a spikey carpet to various designs and designs, then you can cover them with baking paper and iron them until they melt a little safety together. Perler is a brand, you can also find them called Hama beads, and there are also many 'general' fusible/melty beads like the big tub we got from Ikea. Not all homeless beads are created equal. We have found that Ikea ones are great, and good value, but other cheaper ones in general the ones we tried were not as good. So it's worth buying brand beads or just buying a small amount and testing them out first. Check out this site for a good beginner's guide to perler beads. What can you make with the Perler beads? There are endless ideas and templates for perler beads online. If you are looking online, look for those that have a graphic of the beads on the board, or a good, clear, design photo before it is ironed. Trying to determine the design from a finished product can be difficult. If you want to design your own perler bead creations these printable templates are really useful, and there is also an iPad app that could help. For younger children, start with a smaller, simple pattern until they get the hang of things. Larger Larger Have patience for bigger more elaborate designs and will love some of the 3D designs. Perler's smart bead tips. Using a tray or large shallow container to sort your beads is helpful. We also found using long handling tweezers with pointy ends (we found some in our first aid kit) really useful for picking up and placing beads. We tried this cool tool made of straw to pick up and sort beads into colors. This video is useful for learning various ironing techniques – although the adhesive tape technique is too fiddly! A heated skewer melts holes in final designs so you can add strings or jump rings to necklaces or bag labels. You will also find hot glue useful for putting 3D designs together. I hope your kids enjoy these bead perler ideas and tips as much as mine have, and you can get your own miracle perler bead in your home! Jewelry making is a great technique and art, and the most used items for making jewelry are rhinestones, beads, and pearls!
