Each book is a bridge between value, helping children maintain what they learned the previous level of value, and and for the next class level. If you take a prolonged break from school in the summer, you may already find that about 80% of what they have learned towards the end of the year is lost within a month, unless that knowledge is amplified in some way. Of course, many homeschooling parents are used to educating endlessly, and that's what these publishers are trying to promote. The introduction in front of each book tries to convince every parent to act like a typical homeschooling parent! Advice is given to promote the learning environment at home and while you enjoy activities outside during the summer. One recommendation is for your child to read daily for the minimum amount of time depending on the grade level. To that, a generous List of Books is provided. The list is unique and age-appropriate in each book. The list in grades 4-5 looks very good - a mix of classic children's fiction and nonfiction including the Newbery Medal Winner, books on Sacajawea, science-themed books, Beverly Cleary books, poetry collections, and more. The book activity section is divided into three 20-day sections, each more challenging. The Monthly Goals list at the beginning of each and place for stickers at the end of each day's work helps keep the task record done. The list of words for that section follows, and displays words to be jacked up and used in sentences. Each 20-day section begins with the introduction of positive attributes that can be reflected in a child's fitness and their character (such as flexibility or strength). Now, for the meat - the activity itself. For each day there are four sections of activity contained in two pages. They start with arithmetic, then language skills. The last two sections vary in content but include two of: phone reinforcement/spelling, reading skills, vocabulary work, dictionary/reference skills, science, social studies, broader writing, and/or thinking skills. Often, quick suggestions for building fitness or character are provided at the end of a day's lessons. Social studies and science-related activities are included in the Bonus section, and these often involve simple map work or experimentation. Outdoor extension activities are also included at the end of each section. The scope and content of the activities is incredible – even live activities are included. I can see how this will make a child sharp during a long break from regular school work - summer or not. We have customers in all sorts of unusual difficulties - with illnesses, pregnancy complications, caring for sick parents, etc. - who could use books like this. Because these books are intended for use by children work alone, they will be a nice backup when you haven't even had time to plan lessons – just to keep the skills sharp until you can get on the track. At the end of each book is a Certificate of Completion, a complete answer key, a sheet of star stickers, and several pages of flash cardstock cards to cut. The book value level indicates the finish level and the next value level. If your child has finished third grade and will start fourth after the break, select the Class 3-4 book. 150 perforated pages, plus flash cards.
