When you're an espresso fan, it's hard to start your day without a shot or two. But going to your favorite coffee shop every day can become an expensive habit. Fortunately, there are machines Nespresso: espresso machines that constantly produce quality coffee shop drinks at home. Best of all, Nespresso machines don't just make espresso. Many of them can make a wide range of coffee drinks. But there are so many different models available - over 60, in fact - that it can be hard to figure out which one is right for you. At BestReviews, we're here to help. If you're ready to buy a Nespresso machine, take a look at the product list above for our top five recommendations. For all the information on how to choose the right Nespresso machine for you, read on. Nespresso machines are easy to operate. You don't need to be a barista expert to make an excellent cup of espresso or coffee - you just insert the capsule and press a few buttons to make a delicious dose of caffeine. The Nespresso machine has low maintenance. You don't need to grind any beans or clean up any mess like you do with a traditional espresso machine. With the Nespresso machine, you get the perfect cream (the liquid of the original espresso extraction) every time that any espresso lover will appreciate. The Nespresso machine can make other coffee drinks, including classic coffee, cappuccino and latte. Automatic shutdown: Many Nespresso machines have an automatic shutdown that shuts down the machine if it hasn't been used for a period of time. This is a great safety feature if you have a habit of forgetting to turn off your appliances before starting out the door in the morning. Milk foam: If you like cappuccino, you definitely want a Nespresso machine that is equipped with milk foam. There are models in the original line and VertuoLine that have frothers. Cup storage and heating: Some Nespresso machines offer a place to store cups as well as a heating function for cups. Before brewing coffee in the Nespresso machine, run the water through the coffee spout without a capsule in the machine. This washes off the welding block and raises the temperature of the machine, so you are guaranteed the perfect cook. To keep your Nespresso machine clean, make a habit of often emptying use container capsules and drip tray. Wash all the removable parts of the machine by hand. Over time, calcium deposits and lime will flow inside the Nespresso machine. To remove these deposits, purchase a descaling kit. The scale of the machine is about every three months. What drinks can I make in the Nespresso machine? A. The types of drinks that can be made in a Nespresso machine depend on the line and the model. All machines make espressos, while some also make lattes and cappuccinos. Only the machines in VertuoLine make traditional coffee. Can I use any coffee in the Nespresso car? A. Nespresso produces its own exclusive range of capsules for its machines, which are available in a variety of intensities and flavors. Capsules or pods made by other brands should not be used because they can damage equipment and void your warranty. What are the benefits of a 19-bar pressure pump in a Nespresso machine? A. The trademark pump in Nespresso machines provides enough energy to break the film on the capsules and release hundreds of different flavors found in the espresso. The shape of the capsules also means pressurized water pours evenly through the bases during extraction, while the pump allows for accurate temperature and flow time to provide the perfect beer. But cleaning - or descaling process - isn't entirely intuitive. We're here to smash it for you. So if you've had a Nespresso machine for a while, or even if you've just purchased a new model, you'll want to read on. The definition of descaling all coffee machines create calcium and lime deposits over time. Descaling is the act of stripping these sediments from the surface of your machine. To keep your Nespresso functioning properly, you should remove these hoardings by descaling regularly. MORE: NerdWallet Coffee Maker Buying Guide How Often Should You Descale Your Nespresso? Nespresso recommends that you scale your machine about every three months. But if you use your machine often and want to make sure that it always produces the best taste, it is recommended that you descale it after every 300 capsules. Some models, such as the VertuoLine, are equipped with light that flashes to warn you that the machine needs to be descaled. MORE: 4 ways with low efforts to pocket more money, how long will it take? The entire process of de-scale of your Nespresso should take no more than 20 minutes. What you need to properly descale your Nespresso, you will need a descaling kit solution. A two-pack kit that works for all machines costs about $9 from Nespresso, but you can sometimes spot it for less money on Amazon. You will also need fresh water and a container that can hold at least 1 litre. - MORE: The best coffee makers How to de-scale your Nespresso Once you have a descaling set, you need to prepare your machine. The descaling process may vary slightly depending on the model, but the first step is the same in all directions: Remove any used capsules from the machine and empty the capsule container. Put the proper amount of fresh water in a water container and mix in a descaling solution bag. You can find out how much water your particular machine requires in the user's manual or on the Nespresso website. Place a container that holds up to a liter of water under the coffee socket and then turn on the machine. To start the desaling process, you will need to press one or more buttons, depending on the model you have. For VertuoLine, hold the singular button for at least seven seconds. For Pixie, Inissia and Citiz, click two flashing At the same time for three seconds, and for Prodigio, press all three buttons for three seconds. Teh Teh The process will now begin and will take about 10 minutes. With some machines, you need to refill the water tank with the used solution afterwards and repeat the process. As soon as your machine starts its cycle, rinse the water container and pour fresh water into it. Then start the cycle for another 10 minutes without descaling the solution in the water. Empty and rinse the drip tray. To get out of descaling mode, click on the same buttons you clicked to start it again. Let your Nespresso machine dry for 10 minutes before use. Here's how this process looks for VertuoLine: And for Pixie: You can find more videos and custom guides with cleaning instructions for other Nespresso models on the Nespresso website.
