2016 From Margo We are proud to announce that this summer we have developed even more puns to play with your child! Our website now has a total of 18 fully customizable view word games to give your kids the practice they need to build their vocabulary. As with all our other Sight Words games, all the materials you need (cards and game cards) can be downloaded and printed directly from your computer &mdash FOR FREE! Sight Words Last Card is our version of the popular card game One. As in Uno, you play cards by matching color or number. But remember to read the word seen on paper first, and look out for wild cards! In Sight Words Lucky 13, your child collects cards by correctly reading the words of the view printed on them. Add or subtract numbers on cards until you have exactly 13 points. Sight Words Hangman is very similar to the classic Hangman game. Instead of guessing the words letter by letter, your child will look at flashcards and read the words of view printed on them. But for every word she misses, she has to add a piece of body to the executioner's noose! Sight Words Donkey is simply a new name for our sight words old maid game. Did you know australians call this card game Donkey? Find and collect corresponding word tickets, and don't be the one left with the donkey card! Page 3 August 29, 2016 From Betsy Sometimes we receive questions from SightWords.com visitors who are worried that their child or nephew may have a learning disability. Particularly worrying is the possibility that their child may have dyslexia. Many people assume dyslexia is a visual problem, in which the brain misinterpretes what the eyes see. But research has shown that in most cases, dyslexia is an auditory problem. In these situations our phonemic awareness program can help a lot to give these children the help they need to prepare to learn to read. So I wanted to take this opportunity to offer some tips. My 5-year-old nephew has many signs of dyslexia. He's starting kindergarten and doesn't recognize all his letters or numbers. We worked a lot with him. SightWords.com doesn't look like it might help. Are there images for words like mine, a, etc.? - Teri Hi Teri, Our Phonemic awareness resume is a great place to start with your nephew. I advise you to start with the Compound Words module, and then work through syllable activities until it is firm in its understanding of concepts. Here are some other tips to follow: if your nephew's school has a voice/language (SLP), set up a meeting. If the SLP knows the Fast ForWord program, this could help your nephew. Consider using Teach your child to read in 100 simple lessons at home every day. Read Sally Shaywitz's Overcoming Dyslexia. It will give you some good information and strategies. Buy a set set letters of the sandpaper alphabet. Have him use the first two fingers of the dominant hand to track down and repeat the names of the letters. Start with letters that look the same in both uppercase and lowercase (Cc, Ss, etc.). Then have him close his eyes (or use a bandage) and move the two fingers to draw the letter and see if he can name. If he can't, give him a choice of two, then three, then four to choose from. When standing still with the name of the letters when he tracks them, use the same letters without a bandage, mix them with other letters, point to one he has traced, and name them. Once you've learned similar-looking uppercase and lowercase letters, add the dissimilar ones (Hh, Gg, etc.). There are no images for words like mine or a except in sign language. They are high-frequency words that can be learned using our watch words that teach techniques after learning the names of all the letters in the lowercase alphabet. Send your school a written communication that requires an assessment to determine if a learning ability is evident. Date and keep a copy! The request probably won't be acted on for a while, but it will put them on notice that you're worried and why. This will strengthen your case if it continues to have problems that are not addressed. If there is a trained tutor in the Orton-Gillingham methodology in your area, try to hire that person to help your nephew. Page 4 August 10, 2016 From Betsy On July 29 and 30, georgia preschool association board members met at the Cobb Galleria Centre just outside Atlanta to attend the Southeast Homeschool Expo, a convention for homeschooling families and resource providers from across the southeast United States. The Georgia Preschool Association has set up a table in the huge exhibition hall. We encouraged participants to join the GPA and participate in our organization and training opportunities. Most of our stand has been dedicated to our sponsorship SightWords.com and the incredible resources available on the website. Convention attendees got to try games from our Phonemic awareness program and watch some of the activity videos that make the site so easy to use. A selection of Sight Words games were also on hand for kids and adults to try. Change.
