Photo: Thaspol Sangsee (Shutterstock) If you're a Facebook fan but hate its recent redesign, there's hope. You can no longer go back to Old Facebook just by clicking a button in the settings menu, but you can install a Chrome extension that magically transforms the site, restoring the look and feel that you previously enjoyed. To get started, visit the appropriately named Old Layout and install an extension in your browser. And, yes, the same person who did this extension did an all-useful Social Fixer extension that will help you curate your News Feed to drown out content you don't want to see. Matt Cruz, you're on a roll. Once you've installed an extension, Facebook should automatically go back to its classic appearance the next time you prepare a site. There's nothing you have to set up to get this lovely look back: Screenshot: David MurphyAs for the way it works, I was surprised to learn that the hack is actually quite simple. No, the extension doesn't use a bunch of HTML and CSS witchcraft to change everything Facebook is updated back into the old look. In fact, as Kruse writes: It tricks Facebook into delivering you an old layout by making your browser pretend to be an old version that their new layout doesn't support G/O Media can get commission so if you see any strange messages about updating your browser while watching quarantine your friends' boring lives, ignore them. Your browser is fine; You just make Facebook think you're using something you don't. There's no guarantee that this little trick will work forever. so enjoy the Old Facebook while you can. And, yes, you can combine this extension with a social fixer to keep an old look and curate the channel without those you hate. This includes all the annoying sponsored Facebook content that eats up the site's valuable real estate and reduces your ability to enjoy seeing what your friends are up to. If it's all too much though, I suppose you might as well use a handy social book manager extension to slowly delete content on Facebook before you delete Facebook itself. This seems like a bit of an overreaction to the new Facebook layout, which even I don't like, but it's important to consider all your options, I suppose. Programmer Nicholas Molin looked at the lineup for the May 27 Google conference and, behold, a session on the development of extensions for Google Chrome was scheduled. This probably means that expansion support will arrive before then, or at least at the same time. Now we'll see if the extension of support can really make users switch. Oh, and whether it's the Mac or Linux versions running up, simultaneously with, or in infinite soon after the expansion features come out. Earlier today, we learned that Chrome will officially support add-ons and scripts like... Read Read Chrome extensions coming out by May! (Nick.pro through Google's operating system) Photo: Vincent Bottalt is harder than before to accidentally lose all his job. Apps come with automatic savings, and Chrome tries to alert you before you close the tab with a lack of work. But hit get in too fast, or suffer an accident, and you can still lose a lot of writing. This can happen with a Facebook update, a questionnaire, or a blog post. But the Chrome Typio Recovery Form extension can save what you write and paste it back in. You'll also see a green strip at the top of the page that glows every time Typio saves a new text. Turn off the lane in the settings. To recover lost text, you can press the blue button, type in the customizable keyboard shortcut, or find it in the right click menu. If any of these options are annoying, you can disable any or all of them. For example, I can only access Typio through the right click. I'm sick of the blue button that appears on every web form, including tweets, logins, and searches. (By default, Typio won't save passwords or credit card numbers, but you can change that.) You can tell Typio how many days to keep the record. When you open Typio, it first shows you a minimalist menu of your last few entries. Click view all entries to see the longer menu. All data is stored locally; Tipio doesn't send anything. (You can check the source code.) And you can disable the extension on any site like Twitter or Google.This is especially useful if you write long posts on blogs, social media, or forms like job applications. For example, I just intentionally closed this blog without saving, and brought it back for just a couple of clicks with Typio.G/O Smee can get a commission Of Typio replaces Lazarus, a similar extension (with the best name) that was eventually abandoned and kicked out of the Chrome Web Store. Even Lazarus was supposed to die, but his spirit lives on. Google Chrome is the most dominant web browser out there, and with thousands of additional extensions to make the online experience more personalized and user-friendly, it's easy to see why. You can browse the available extensions through the Chrome web store, but if you're looking for an addition to a product you're already using (such as Evernote Web Clipper or Office Online), the huge variety of expansion options can be overwhelming. We reviewed the most commonly used, talked and recommended Chrome extensions for work and compiled a list of our favorites for 2018.Credit: AdBlocker UltimateAdBlocker UltimaitIt is pretty easy to guess what AdBlocker Ultimate does. This is The extension allows users to eliminate ads on websites (including YouTube ads) and freely view without distraction or tracking. AdBlocker Ultimate also blocks domains that are suspicious or known malware. Credit: Credit: CaptureNimbus CaptureThere has many screenshot extensions out there, but Nimbus Capture not only allows users to capture and edit screenshots (full or partial), but also to record screencasts or other videos (including webcam video and embedded video) directly from the screen. Users can easily share saved screenstats on YouTube or Google Drive, but this requires a Premium membership. Fortunately, the basic extension is free. Photo: KamiKamiKami is a convenient PDF extension and document mark-up that works offline and works with other Google products (such as Google Drive and Google Classroom). Kami offers users a variety of options for adding comments, highlighting text, drawing and editing, and the main version is free. Credit: PixelBlockPixelBlockIf you get a lot of advertising and email sales, or if you just want to block your Gmail privacy, give PixelBlock a try. This free extension alerts you when someone tries to track the email you're reading (by displaying a small red eye icon) and automatically blocks the attempt. Credit: TodoistTodoistPerfect for Multitasking Entrepreneurs, Todoist is a fantastic app that allows you to collaborate with team members, track projects, manage deadlines, share and delegate tasks, save websites, access tasks offline and install SMS reminders and push notifications right from your browser. Todoist also integrates with mobile devices and calendar apps such as iCalendar, so it's available even when you're not on your computer. Photo: The awesome ScreenshotAwesome Screenshot is a well-named extension that makes it easy to capture full-page and partial screenshots of pages, blur sensitive information, record the screen as a video, annotate images and share what you capture through Google Drive. This free extension is a must for business users who often need to save and share information with website, video chats and webcasts. Credit: Social BladeSocial Bladelf your growing influence of social media (or tracking competition) is a major part of your job, expanding Social Blade can just save you time and give you valuable information. Social Blade allows users to track stats and growth through social networking sites, and the extension automatically displays statistics for videos and messages you consume (without having to click from YouTube, Twitter, Instagram or TwitchTV). Credit: MomentumMomentumWhile is not strictly an extension of the business, Momentum has earned a place on our list because it is excellent Motivate yourself, stay focused and make your viewing experience a little softer and more personal. Momentum allows users to design their own dashboards, complete with inspirational quotes, soothing images, to-do lists, reminders, focus time, local weather and more. A performance dashboard may be available when opening a new tab, and while it may seem silly, a lot of performance pros (including Tim Ferriss) Ferriss) Credit: OneTabOneTabIf you regularly have a few dozen tabs open at a time you are overdue for an extension such as OneTab. Having a large number of tabs open slows down your machine's performance, but with the click of a mouse OneTab aggregates the URLs of each open tab to the list, which not only speeds up your computer (because you use less memory), but also makes it easier to view the links you want. Photo: LinkedInthal extension from LinkedIn is great for lead development, and the free version (there's a Premium subscription available also) is surprisingly valuable. With the free version, users can view LinkedIn profile details for contacts directly into Gmail and view shared connections, experiences, and interests. LinkedIn Sales Navigator also allows users to hover over email addresses and view LinkedIn profile information directly in Gmail.Credit: GrammarlyGrammarly is a wildly popular Chrome extension that automatically highlights errors (spelling, word selection and grammar) by type and offers corrected suggestions. Free extension brings Grammarly's strength to everything you enter online, from Gmail to social media, making it a great app for workers in all industries. Photo: DocuSignDocuSign Isign is a free non-head extension that makes managing digital signatures super easy. With DocuSign, users can add signatures to emails (in Gmail) and PDF files and send documents that require signatures. This extension is ideal for businesses with lots of internal or external contracts. Credit: HoneyHoneyTechnically, Honey is not an extension of the business so much as the expansion of purchases, but saving Honey users have access to making it a must for business and personal purchases. When honey users shop online, the extension automatically checks the internet for available coupon codes and enters any valid codes into the checkout box for you; there's really no shortage.
