Blue's clues what does blue want to make out of recycled things credits

You've heard your friends talking about credit card points and you want to be in action, but you're not sure where to start. They tell you that the American Express Membership Rewards program is a good place to start, so you start researching cards and think you want to stick with just the basics for now. In this case, the Blue from American Express credit card® may be a good starter card for you. The Amex Blue card is a great starter card for most people who want to start earning credit card points. Test it and see if you like it! Image Credit: ESB Professional via Shutterstock Amex Blue Card is the basic Membership Gift card available. You will earn one point per dollar for all purchases, accumulated in your general Membership Rewards account. There is no annual fee, unlike some other MR cards. Bottom Line: Earn 2x points through the Amex Travel portal and 1x points elsewhere with an Amex Blue card. Amex Blue Card Benefits: Travel RewardsBeing cardholders don't provide many additional benefits, but there are a few to mention. First, having a Membership Reward card gives you access to the program's travel benefits, which includes earning 2x points on the travel portal. You can also transfer the points you earn to an Amex travel partner. This is perhaps the most important benefit, as travel partners can provide a value of $0.02 and above per point. Other Membership Reward redemptions can also be made, such as paying for your trip with points earned, and several other redemption options offered by Amex MR. This Amex Blue Card Insurance Option offers several additional benefits in addition to only earning Membership Reward points. For road fighters, you will get car rental insurance and a roadside assistance hotline. To get rental insurance, you must reject the agency's waiver. In addition, you will have purchase and return protection if you have damaged or stolen items, or that you cannot return to the vendor. The downside of using KartuSering Amex Blue card is that it doesn't come with a welcome bonus or any bonus income category. This is really a basic entry level card that you can use to get started with Membership Rewards. You are just starting out in the points world and need an easily obtainable card. You are looking for a card that offers some insurance benefits. You are already a points earner and are looking for ways to really maximize your Membership Rewards account. You will not use points for travel rewards; You'll be better with a higher-earning cash-back card. Maximizing your Membership Reward points with an Amex Blue card only use for as many of your purchases and bills as possible. Here are some tips to do this: #1. Tip: Use a card with the American Express Travel Rewards portal to earn 2x points. Tips #2: Watch Watch The Amex Offers section of your card account screen (found at the bottom) to find potential bonus points offers. Best #3: Refer a friend. You may be able to earn bonus points for doing so. Check the deals for your Refer-A-Friend. You may be able to earn additional Membership Reward points! Image Credit: VIDI Studio. When you redeem your Membership Reward points earned with an Amex Blue card, you'll want to make sure you get the maximum value. There are several ways to make up for it, but most don't offer much value. Low Value Gift Options: Pay for statement credits ($0.006 per point) Selected gift cards ($0.005 per point) Shopping partners such as Amazon and Best Buy (0.007$) Ticketmaster, Telecharge, and AXS ($0.005 per point) Shop through AMEX Mall ($0.005 per point) Book a hotel via portal ($0.007 per point) High Value Gift Options: One American Express gift card ($0.0.007 per point) High Value Gift Option: Any gift cards American Express ($0.0.007 per point) 01 per point) Donate to charity ($0.01 per point) Book flights with points ($0.01 per point) Transfer points to travel partners (0.01-0.02$ per point) Highest value options, as always, is to transfer your points to a travel partner to use for travel rewards from their loyalty program. Otherwise, the points are much more valuable and will not be worth the redemption of your time. Membership Rewards has many different airline and hotel partners that you can use your points on, see the full list here. One of the positives of this card is that it has no annual fee. However, there are other annual no-fee cards that have more potential to earn Membership Reward points. You can get The Amex Everyday® Credit Card from American Express, for example. The card has no annual fee but comes with 1 bonus category: 2x points in US supermarkets at the first $6,000 per year. In addition, if you make more than 20 purchases a month on that card, you will get a 20% bonus on all points you earn (with a few exceptions). While not a Membership Reward card, you can also get cards like the Chase Freedom® Card or Chase Freedom Unlimited, both of which are free of annual fees and offer 1.5-5x points on Ultimate Rewards. Ultimate Rewards is a great alternative to Membership Rewards, and offers many of the same benefits as a different set of travel partners. However, if you won't be using points for travel rewards, you might be better at getting a cash-back card that offers better fares. This card does have a foreign transaction fee of 2.7%, so using it abroad will not be worth the additional cost. Usually it only earns 1x points, although you can earn 2x points through special offers or by using the travel portal on AMEX. Other Unique Features of Amex Blue Card also have some insurance benefits as well, which we will discuss here. Unless otherwise necessary, all programs that provide third-party services will be charged by third parties help – Connect with a roadside assistance hotline when you really need it to get an emergency puller, locksmith, or other service. This fee is extra per third-party provider. Car rental loss and damage insurance – Coverage of up to $50,000 is available if you refuse agent rental insurance. Global help hotline - When traveling abroad, you can contact this hotline for emergency assistance for things like lawyers or language translation. Entertainment access - Get VIP access or concert tickets with this benefit from AMEX. They will pre-purchase tickets to the event and make it available only to their cardholders. Extended warranty – Certain items will be eligible for extended warranty of up to one year when purchased with the card. Purchase protection – You can get protection for any purchase if they are stolen or accidentally damaged, as long as you buy them in full with the card. Return protection – With return protection, you can get money back for items you can't return to vendors within days of purchase. This is a great card for those who want to get started in the world of credit card points, and it can also be a good card to help build your credit. It earns 1x points for all purchases on Membership Rewards, but you can also currently earn 2x points through the American Express travel portal. This credit card has no annual fees, and also comes with some additional insurance such as car rental and purchase/return protection insurance. Since there is no charge, there is no harm in getting a card. While there are definitely more valuable cards out there, these cards will be worth it for beginners who want to start earning points. It earns 1x points for all purchases, and 2x points with AMEX Travel. These points are all added up in your Membership Rewards account. It also offers car rental insurance, roadside assistance, a global assistance hotline, access to AMEX Tickets, and warranty, purchase and return protection. Yes, it is a Membership Reward card. American Express travel partners include British Airways, JetBlue, Hawaiian Airlines, and more. Your points will never expire as long as you have one Membership Reward card still open. Points are usually posted at the end of each billing month, but may take up to 6-8 weeks depending on how you earn points. Yes, you will be charged a 2.7% transaction fee for using a overseas. No card. Cards have a variable APR, see the current rates in the card summary table above. You can use the points earned for your account. Your membership is in a variety of different ways, priced anywhere from $0.005 each to more than $0.02 if used with a travel gift partner. Sign in to the American Express Membership Rewards and go to the Travel menu. From there you can transfer your points to a travel partner. Alternatively, you can use for a variety of different redemptions, although the value will be greatly reduced if used for anything else. Under Membership Rewards, go to Trips and you'll see the option to transfer points to a travel partner. You can transfer it with a 1,000-point increase, but you must have an open loyalty account with the partner you want to transfer. It can be set up for free in advance. The souped-up version of American Express from the former Blue for Business card has a bit of something for everyone: Attractive rewards, no annual fees and a long 0 percent introductory offer. The new card, called The Blue Business® Plus Credit Card from American Express, is a small business credit card with no annual fees that helps you earn 2X Membership Rewards® points on everyday business purchases such as office supplies or client dinners. You should compare other popular business credit cards before signing up. The beef gift structure is limited to spending the first $50,000 each year, potentially netting you as much as $1,000 membership reward points to spend on travel, gift cards or as a credit statement. After that, it is one unlimited point per $1 spent. Plus, enjoy the flexibility to place more purchases on your Card and get rewards when you buy above your credit limit. If you want a gift, but don't need a business card, explore the bonuses available on popular gift credit cards. The Card's decent intro offer also comes with a 12-month, 0 percent APR offer for purchases and balance transfers. Apr after the initial period is variable 14.99%, 17.99% or 20.99%, based on your creditworthiness and other factors as specified at the time of account opening. A long interest-free period can be a godsend for those who want to make some great purchases to help launch their business. You can use the card to transfer the balance and get a leg-up to pay some debt but keep in mind there is a balance transfer fee of $5 or 3 percent of the amount transferred, whichever is greater. No excessive fees The Card is also intended to grow with the business, allowing the cardholder to exceed the limit that has been set without incurring the during overpayment before the next billing cycle. It also provides additional employee cards at no additional cost and allows the owner to set employee controls to receive alerts if expenses are on the card a defined category. So, if you only approve the use of U.S. gas station employee cards and U.S. office supply stores, you will automatically get a notification if the card is used in a restaurant.
