Slathered butter, doused in syrup and paired with fresh fruit and half bacon, waffles are versatile breakfast heroes. And while frozen waffles will do the trick if you're fast, if you want to achieve true, diner-level waffle perfection, you'll need a waffle maker. But in an abundance of options, what is the best waffle maker for you? Which waffle maker you buy ultimately depends on what type of waffles you like. Some waffle makers make thin, crisp waffles, while Belgian waffle makers produce thick, fluffy squares ready for topping. Next, specify how many waffles you want to make at the same time. If you generally cook for yourself and one other person, a standard waffle maker should meet your needs. But if you imagine whipping waffles for the whole family, it makes sense to choose a higher-yield waffle maker. Williams Sonoma Pay attention to the specifics too. The flippable waffle maker is ideal if you want to evenly brown on both sides (but remember, rotating them will only produce round waffles). And if you want more control of your brownness level, choose a model with multiple browning options. Finally, if versatility is a priority, the goal is a bigger waffle maker that can be used to make other foods because some models are multifunctional and come with interchangeable plates, say, paninis or DIY pizzas. Here are our picks for the best waffle makers, according to outstanding ratings and online reviews. Whether you plan to use it every day or only twice a year, any of the below models would be a worthwhile addition to your kitchen.
