Take a look at these examples to see how past continuation and past simplicity are used. When I woke up this morning, it snowed. I was asleep when you called me. Use this exercise to test your grammar. Grammar Test 1 Past Continuous and Almost Simple: Grammar Test 1 Read the description for more information. Grammar descriptions help to show how past successive and simple two past actions or situations are linked. Simple past simple actions of the past show that there has been in the past, not the present. Simple verbs of the general past have -ed at the end (e.g. call, play, arrive). Irregular verbs usually have different forms than other vowel sounds (e.g. waking → break, break →, and feel →). My parents called me yesterday. I woke up early this morning. Sam played basketball when he was in college. We do not deny and infinity. My parents didn't call me yesterday. It didn't happen early this morning. We create a question form and then create a topic and an infinite verb. Did you wake up early this morning? Did Sam play basketball when he was in college? Past continuations and almost continuous shows that behavior is already in progress at a certain time in the past. What were you doing last night at 8? I was studying. In other words, I started studying before 8pm and continued to study after 8pm. Past continuous activities can show that they have been going on for a while, as well as for a while. We were cleaning the house all morning. We were either in the form of a verb-ing, and the past was in a row. She couldn't come to the party. She was working. Three years ago, we were living in our hometown. I tried to give him advice, but he didn't listen. What were you doing at this time last year? The combination of these two prototypes shows that the simple actions of the past took place in the middle of a series of ingoing actions. I suddenly felt sleepy while studying. We often use these prototypes to show behaviors that interfere with other behaviors. I broke my leg while skiing. When I went to work, I saw an old friend. We were watching television when the power went off. Can you see the difference in the meaning of these two sentences? When the guests arrived, Jane was cooking dinner. When the guests arrived, Jane cooked dinner. In the first, Jane started cooking dinner before the guests arrived. We know that because we use past continuation. In the second sentence, the guests arrived first and Jane started cooking. Perform this exercise to test your grammar again. The first student to reach the final will win the game. In this free past simple speaking activity, students play games to talk about various daily actions and activities in the past. In this activity, students play a card game and use simple affirmation sins and picture cards from the past to talk about what they did yesterday. Give each group a set of four picture cards, and they mix and process evenly. A student goes first and puts down the picture card. Then the student creates a simple positive sentence of the past about the actions shown on the card. The next student must now put down another 'I went...'. The card (e.g. yesterday, I went shopping.) or the 'restart' card, where the student can change the verb to something else, for example, I did my homework. This process continues until one of the students puts down all the cards. That student wins the game. Students can play multiple rounds to practice talking about all the actions of the past. In this rewarding past simple activity, students complete a positive sentence with real information about what they have done in the past. Students also write simple sentences of one true past at the end. Next, students stand up and walk around the classroom trying to find someone who has done the same thing for themselves. How about that? If the two students' answers are the same, the two students write each other's names in the Name column next to the sentence. However, if the answer is different, both students will not write anything. When everyone is finished, students tell the class what they find. In this charming past simple board game, students collect words to make simple positive statements past as many as they can. The game offers three or four groups of boards, dice and counters. It also provides each player with a pen of a different color and a piece of paper for writing. The player rolls the dice and takes the counter sequentially as many times as the number shown on the dice. Players can move horizontally or vertically, but not diagonally. The player then records the words that land and in the square with a colored pen. The player now owns the word in the square and no one else can record it. However, other players can pass through the square during the game and do so in other words. The game continues until all the words are painted. After that, players use the words they wrote to create as many simple affirmation statements as possible. Each word can only be used once. The players then read the sentence with caution to the -ed sound of a simple general verb of the past. The other player hears and confirms that each sentence is grammatically correct and -ed pronunciation is appropriate. Players earn 1 point for each grammatically correct sentence and 1 point for each appropriate pronunciation. At the end of the game, the player with the most points wins. Wins.
