Heroines of education All remember at least one of their teachers. The kind of person who made his education fun, or impactful. The teacher can completely change the direction of the student's life. Here are just a few of the women who do just that. Shella Condino is a science teacher at Presidio High School in Presidio, Texas. She grew up in the Philippines very poor. She came to America hoping to make a difference. Condino is currently a physics teacher at Presidio High School. She took a job in the small town of Presidio because no one else would. She wanted to use her innovative methods to educate students. As a physics teacher, Condino uses the aerospace industry to teach teens physics, allowing them to have a hands-on approach to learning. Five years ago, she founded the Rocket Club, which involves middle and high school students. In 2012, the Kondino Missile Club took part in the all-Russian competition. He finished 11th out of 100 teams. Condino was selected by the National Aviation Hall of Fame Committee as the 2011 A. Scott Crossfield Aerospace Education Teacher of the Year, and no doubt Condino's resourcefulness, creativity and willingness to give her everything to her students strengthens her as an inspirational teacher. Marilyn Gambrell Marilyn Gambrell is a former parole officer and general manager/teacher. She works at No More Victims in Houston, Texas. As a former parole officer, Marilyn Gambrell was forced to change the lives of children whose parents are currently in detention. Gambrell decided to start organizing No More Victims: a class class that Gambrell promoted. Gambrell saved hundreds of lives and instilled the confidence and strength many students lacked to change their lives. She says: My favorite aspect of my work is when our children feel safe enough to release their pain, fears and secrets that have kept them emotionally paralyzed and actually witness them starting to breathe their own air. In 2005, Gambrell's story Fighting Odds was made into a television movie. Many of her disciples recognize her as the force of the change their lives needed to make something out of their lives. I'm not going to stop at all costs, Gambrell says. No More Victims has caught the attention of celebrities such as hip-hop artist Chamillionaire, who support the organization and help continue the good work. Michelle Shearer is a chemistry teacher at Urbana HS High School in Ijamsville, Maryland. She was originally a student at Princeton University. Shearer volunteered at a school for the deaf. Based on her experience, she decided wants to change his specialty. She decided to get a teacher's certificate in addition to a bachelor's degree in chemistry, and before teaching at Urban High School, Urbana, taught at the Maryland School for the Deaf. She was the first teacher to offer and an AP Chemistry class in the school's 135-year history. Shearer was named the 61st National Teacher of the Year in 2011. The technology and strategies of teaching certainly strengthen my efforts, but my recognition of the power of human connection seems to have the deepest impact on my student's achievements, Shearer says. All her students in 14 years of teaching have nothing but good things to say about Shearer's teaching methods. They have a powerful impact on their education. Erin Gruwell Erin Gruwell is a teacher and motivational speaker. She began teaching downtown students in 1994 at Woodrow Wilson High School in Long Beach, California. During one lesson, the students exchanged derogatory words. Gruwell intervened, comparing derogatory words to the Holocaust. Some students didn't know what the Holocaust was. She has since made it her mission to change the lives of these children and purchased books using her own money for students to take home. In order to better understand the students' situation, Gruwell decided to use writing. Students wrote life magazines as a creative outlet. Their entries were divided unanimously in class for discussion and reflection. Gruwell made several sacrifices in her life to make sure that the young people she taught were successful. Even her marriage was a victim because her husband did not support her participation in the students. They soon divorced. However, Gruwell said that watching all her graduate students made everything worthwhile. Her story was made into a major movement film called Freedom Writers. She was played by Hillary Swank. She now works as a motivational speaker. She is the founder of the Freedom Writers' Foundation, and still gives students and teachers to become their own freedom writers. Amy Gibson is an English teacher at Huffington High School. She was an English teacher there for 37 years. In 2012, Gibson was awarded the John F. Kennedy Center/Stephen Sondheim Inspirational Teacher Award and $10,000. The former student nominated Gibson for the award. Her name was Ellie Bohlen. In her essay, Bohlen called Gibson a Victorian woman who has a strict but respectful reputation. Bohlen went on to say that Gibson had made a changing impression on her. Gibson is the reason why she has a voice and has become more confident, she says Gibson taught at Catholic schools in Baltimore and in St. Mary's County during her career. She says staying excited about teaching is the key to being effective. This isn't Gibson's first award. In 2004, she was named Calvert County Teacher of the Year and also received honors from the College Board, the University of Maryland's Philip Merrill College of Journalism and Katherine Mo Katherine Mo is a 5th grade elementary school teacher at Donlin Drive Elementary School. She has been a teacher for the past 15 years, spending the third generation teaching in her family. Moe is the latest recipient of the Central New York Technology Alliance Award. She was chosen because she inspired students in math, science, engineering and engineering through practical activities. Moe has included rocket science challenges and other practical activities to increase the interest and overall results in education that students receive. Mo loves to read and is known for reading books that interest her students, so they have common interests to discuss. Children appreciate that she is ready to treat them. Hard work pays off, and learning can be fun and exciting, says Moe. She works very hard, so her students have a fun learning environment that offers them options and further their interests. There are many unsung heroes in the world of education. But the satisfaction it brings is quite often. Teachers can change the world.
