Psychiatrists should be able to focus on treating patients rather than being burdened with many laborious MOC requirements. The suffering of our patients' illnesses is compounded by fear, anger, sadness and uncertainty in the current multifaceted social turmoil... The COVID-19 pandemic permeates every aspect of our complex society and shows how fragile our normal lifestyle is. Behavioral health is by no means synonymous with psychiatry, a medical specialty that fights acute and chronic mental disorders. One of the many lessons of this pandemic: life, as we know, should not be taken for granted, and can change dramatically overnight. Preliminary authorization sacrifices the practice of medicine on the altar of financial greed, and it must be stopped. As psychiatrists, we need to play an important role, especially for our patients who are already suffering from anxiety disorders or depression. As psychiatrists, we do not just evaluate and treat psychiatric patients - we restore their freedoms and ability to achieve happiness. It is time to fight back and restore our noble identity that society society always respected and appreciated. Being a member of the APA has a huge advantage for us individually and collectively. The editor is the person who oversees the preparation of the text for newspapers, magazines, scientific journals and books. The term editor may also refer to a person who assists the author in copying the text. Editor Chris King describes his work as an invisible wash. The editor, she says, is like a ghost, in that her handiwork should never be obvious (Ghosts and a joint letter to Ultimate Writing Coach, 2010). A good editor understands what you are talking about and writing about and not getting involved too much. (Irwin Shaw) (William Hon)Every writer needs at least one editor; most of us need two. (Donald Murray) Series editors; those who work with newspapers, magazines, movies, and books. Two kinds that concern us in the scientific publication of editors and copywriters. Unfortunately, the first term is commonly used for both, the cause - or rather the result - of confusion in thinking . . . Identify and simplify . . . The mind of the editor sees the entire manuscript, understands the thinking behind it, is clear or not clear, is trained to judge its intellectual quality and attitude to other work, can detect a chapter or section or even a paragraph that has gone awry, and can tell the author where to fix it, and sometimes how. But such a mind is often impatient with less, does not enjoy the painstaking and often painful work of detailed correction. (August Fruke, skeptic among scholars. California Press, 1993) Sense of hierarchy The Editors need a hierarchical sense of manuscript, book or article. They need to see its structure, its totality, before they are involved in the little things. A writer should be on the lookout when an editor starts by fixing commas or offering a small reduction when the real problem is at the level of the organization or strategy or point of view. Most of the problems in writing are structural, even on the scale of the page . . . A sense of hierarchy is all the more necessary in editing, because writers also want to focus on the trivia... To take a pencil to the manuscript to approve it to say that it just needs some correction when in fact it is just as likely to require a rethink altogether. I mean, and sometimes say, well, let's see if it's ready to be marked. (Richard Todd in Good Prose: The Art of Nonfiction by Tracy Kidder and Richard Todd (Random House, 2013) Editor's Roles In Publishers can be perceived as basically performing three different roles, all of them simultaneously, thirdly, they perform a function similar to Janus, presenting the house to the author and author of the house. (Alan D. Williams, What is the Editor? Editing by Gerald Gross. Grove, 1993) The Limits of the Editor's Best Work writer comes entirely from himself. The editing process is so simple. If you have Mark Twain, don't try to turn him into Shakespeare or make Shakespeare into Mark Twain. Because in the end an editor can only get as much out of an author as the author has in it. (Maxwell Perkins, quoted by A. Scott Berg in Max Perkins: Editor of Genius. Riverhead, 1978) Heywood Brown on the editorial Mind Editorial Mind, so-called, suffers from the King Cole complex. The types subject to this misconception tend to believe that all they need to do is get the thing to appeal to it. You remember that King Cole called for his bowl just as if there was no such thing as the Volstead Amendment. What we want is humor, says the editor, and he expects the hapless author to trot around the corner and come back with a quart of jokes. The editor will classify what we want is humor as part of the collaboration on his part. He seems like the perfect division of labour. After all, the author has no choice but to write.
