However, Disney chief executive Robert Iger has shown impressive foresight in locking in Marvel's thousands of comic book heroes and villains, six of which were showcased in the Avengers film, which opened two weeks ago. The premiere broke box office records, and since then ticket sales around the world have increased by almost 800 million dollars. Barron welcomed the Marvel deal at the time (Dream Team: Mickey, Spidey and The Hulk, September 7, 2009), and we still believe the Disney boss is on the right track in focusing the company's creative and business executives on developing the franchise around various brands, as he explained in the CEO feature Spotlight last year (Silent Mouseketeer, December 5, 2011). Disney investors applauded, too, and sent shares (ticker: DIS) up 21.5% this year, recently $45.56. The stock, which is moderately valued at 15.2 times current fiscal year earnings, could work its way into the low $50s a year or so, backed by the growth of Disney's dominant cable networks (ESPN and Disney Channel), a strong boost in theme park attendance worldwide, and remain focused on returning excess capital to shareholders. The company bought $5 billion of its shares last year and may be close to what it will be in 2012. THOMAS ALLEMAN The excited audience response to the Avengers came just in time to revive a discussion last Tuesday of Disney's second-quarter operating income, which rose 18 percent to 58 cents per share, exceeding forecasts for ESPN's brisk growth in advertising and subscription fees and heavy spending at Disney parks. The film's early success also allowed the company to change the subject from the flop of its sci-fi op, John Carter, which led to a $200 million write-off, a quarterly loss of $84 million in the studio segment and the departure of Walt Disney Studios chairman Richard Ross. After the release of the earnings, Iger told investors that Avengers merchandise is virtually sold out in theme park stores, implying strong and strong demand. The company is already planning several sequels featuring characters from the film. Iger was unavailable for comment. DISNEY COULD CONTINUE is reaping the benefits of several years of major investment in its core business. In addition to Pixar, acquired in 2006, and Marvel, Iger oversaw the acquisition of game maker Playdom, significant capital improvements in Florida and California parks, the rollout of Disney Channel in 167 countries, and the provision of important (and expensive) sports rights to games for ESPN, and the company's resolute expansion of the cruise ship and leisure-resort business. How To Disney's problems face-navigation growth of video content on mobile devices and the Internet, and make online games profitable- they are common to the entire industry, and Disney is approaching them thoughtfully. While Wall Street appreciates Disney's capabilities, analysts collectively favor the company's peers a little more. This imposition of skepticism bodes well for investors who tend to believe Disney's magic can last. -- Michael Santoli email: editors@barrons.com error occurred, please try again later. Thank you This article was sent the following was prepared in partnership with our friends at Walt Disney World Resort who invite you to discover the world of magic and memories the whole family will share. . Walt Disney World family vacation. Character-filled days, fireworks-filled evenings, surprisingly great food and drinks for parents, and that joy - plastered on your children's faces throughout the journey. This last part is what Walt Disney World is really all about; impressive spells that are the material of lifelong memories. In an effort to capture these moments, we sent a professional photographer and his family to the Magic Kingdom®. Jason and Teri Roth took their two girls, Sienna (Sisi, 5, and Makena, 9, on one long magical weekend to document the thrill along the way for the rest of us. TAKE A QUIZ! For many parents, the best part of the whole Walt Disney World experience is the moment you tell your kids you're going to Disney World. One part of me wanted to give them heads to build excitement, says Roth. We're going to Disney. Rota, wisely, chose something between them, telling the girls exactly a week before. Seven days later at the airport, the wait was still at full throttle. The amount of adrenaline and general excitement at the airport was something else, says Roth, describing what sounds like one of the most enjoyable family airport experiences ever. They both buzzed quite hard, sang songs on the way to the airport, through security, and went to the gate. The girls were just lit up. When she looked out the window of the plane they were about to hit, she felt that she had moved to turn around and make an agitated jump. Walt Disney World is a place where children can fully immerse themselves in fantasy. The right suit certainly helps. That's why the first stop on the tour and Makena is Bobbidi Boutique, where fairy godparents in training gave the girls a complete makeover for their favorite characters (Cinderella for Cece; Princess Elena Avalorskaya for Makena). Roth has never seen his five-year-old, in particular, sit still for such a period of time as during her complete transformation. He also never saw so much brilliance in one place. We were covered in glitter throughout the visit. I still get the shine out of our hats, suitcases and clothes. It's all part of the magic. Jason Roth has one piece of advice he is adamant about for Magic Kingdom visitors®: Pram rental. First of all, you won't automatically think that you need a stroller with a 5- and 9-year-old, but Roth and his family of New Yorkers (all great walkers) said not to underestimate the amount of walking involved. The stroller was necessary. Even the 9-year-old was thrilled to climb in on Charmed Tales with Belle, an interactive rendition of Beauty and the Beast, takes to the stage (played by Philip the horse) and Makena pulls out her iPod Touch to capture the moment. Her father, who makes a living as a photographer, helps her capture the moment. We're always looking for light and where the good light is and trying to be in the moment and anticipate the shot, he says. I totally believe that I can pass the phone and sometimes my camera and it can snap a good picture, he says. Although, her selfie game is much stronger than mine. After visiting the Pirates League in Adventureland and spending a day exploring the park as pirates, and Makena return to the hotel, take a bath and then pay it forward - giving mom her own magical makeover. Using a makeup kit they got from Bibbidi Bobbidi's boutique, they transform their mom. Makena has been logging for some time, something she took from her grandmother and practices at home, and was not set aside with fervor while on vacation. Inspired by his trip, too, picks up the habit when they relax in the hotel. Her letter is becoming increasingly impressive, says Roth. She is starting to get into documenting her life more. What could be better than documenting a trip to the Magic ®? (We have a princess of perfectionism, reads above the entry.) One of the most amazing things about The Magic Kingdom® is that fireworks and projections are shown every night at the castle, says Roth. Everywhere, families are tired and hugging, and there are such heightened emotions. Then this fantastic display goes away and, well, the magic of the castle has power. Mouths enter the Magic Kingdom®: Long Weekend ItineraryFriday: Mouths flying from JFK to Orlando, arriving in the evening. The family heads straight to Disney Wilderness Lodge, fresh from Disney's Magic Express. Along the way they see fireworks flying over the trees, illuminating the Magic At the Whispering Canyon Cafe, the family grabs a late-night bite. (Ask the waiter for ketchup, as Makena did, and you can expect the waiter to shout: Need ketchup ova here! Saturday: The family heads to the Bibbidi Bobbidi boutique first to perfectionism and dresses. They then make their way to the Princess Fairytale Hall to see Princess Elena, the beloved Makena. One standout ride during the day is the Seven Dwarf Mines Train ride, nervous that it might be too scary, says Roth, but Makena encouraged her to be brave and give it a try. It was exciting, perhaps too much, as still says about the trip. She's proud of herself that she went for it though. The family then went to Charmed Tales with Belle. In this show was to take part in the action, dressing like Philip the Horse. And Makena and got to meet Belle, and were very excited because they were a marathon of beauty and beast last week. Go back to Disney Wilderness Lodge's log room, lounge around, and watch the Disney Junior Marathon - Elena, Sophia First, Mickey Mouse Clubhouse. (Sisi says: It's more fresh when you watch it at Disney.) Sunday: On Sunday, parents first head to the Pirates League in the Magic Kingdom® to get everything in their best pirate makeup and clothes. Dressed as pirates, and daring her previous day on the Seven Dwarfs Mine Train, the family rides on Buzz Lightyear's Space Ranger Spin, shoot aliens and then grab lunch for Lunch Pad. The family heads back to Disney Wilderness Lodge to weather the storm, playing arcade games, shopping, and taking much-needed naps. And makena give mom your own pirate makeover. The family goes out for dinner at Disney's Grand Floridian Resort and Spa, then take in the final fireworks display at the Magic Kingdom®. Go back to the hotel and the magazine. Monday: The family heads to the airport, excited as when they arrived - but a little more brilliant thanks to the pixie dust.
