Scott Olson / Getty Images News/Getty Images If you're moving to Golden State, you'll soon need to purchase a new driver's license to legally cruise on Rodeo Drive. California allows visitors, as well as new guests, to use a valid license from another state, but it sets a tight deadline for anyone traveling to legal residence. Since state DMV offices require appointments, it's a good idea to get ready for this job before arrival. California requires all drivers to have a legal license. The state's law also insists that new residents be licensed in California within 10 days as a result of determining residency. There are a number of actions they say you are now legally Californians: voting in state-held elections, paying tuition as a resident, or applying for a limited allowance for Californians, such as exemption from property taxes. To get a new license in California, you'll need to make an appointment with the California DMV, where you'll provide a completed DL44 form, and take a picture of your fingerprint. You also need a Social Security number - which will be verified by the DMV - to pass an eye test and pass an eye test Written test. You don't have to pass a driving test unless you've moved from a foreign country. Driving without a valid license is a minor offense under Section 12500 of the California Vehicle Code. If you still carry a valid out-of-state license, you could be coming down with a warning and reminder of the law covering new residents. Since officers do not have access to your legal residency date, they may not be able to write a report or charge a penalty. However, they'll find out about the date you moved here, and a second stop for the same reason probably means a quote and a fine. It can reach a maximum of $1,000, in addition to six months in jail, three years probation and/or a 30-day confiscation of your car, on top of other penalties for driving on out-of-state plates and vehicle registration. Although you may be able to temporarily drive a legal out-of-state license, you'll need to register your vehicle in California. This requires the last registration certificate, as well as a request for registration or registration in California, signed by all owners displayed in the old registry. You'll also need a vehicle verification form completed by a suitable party. California also wants to see the title out of state if there is a change of registered owners. You will need to hand over the old license plates unless they expire or the original country in which they were issued requires you to surrender them. Courtesy of Creative Commons License (Flickr/Robert S. Donovan) When people learn to drive, they usually start with the most basic class of driver's license: class C license. Most countries have at least one motorcycle class, three non-commercial classes and three commercial license classes. The Department of Motor Vehicle Websites can help you sort through the subtleties of license classes. In most states, licenses fall to classes A, B, C and M. Grades 1, 2 and 3 are further broken down by commercial and non-commercial vehicles. These three classes cover cars, trucks and tractor trailers. In addition, all classes A, B and C have separate weight restrictions for both the main operational vehicle and all traded items. The basic Class C license allows you to drive vehicles of two and three outs up to a certain weight (in California, 26,000lbs and 6,000lbs, respectively). A Class C license is the standard driver's license. With Class C, you can transport up to 16 passengers. A Class C commercial license can contain endorsements that allow a driver to transport hazardous materials or more than 16 passengers. A class B commercial license allows you to operate vehicles up to a certain amount (e.g., 26,000 lb in California) and drag commercial caravans up to a certain amount (typically 10,000 lb). Class B drivers can also operate B-class, no-commercial vehicles and towing vehicles that Class C drivers can tow. With a Class A commercial license, you can operate all Class B and C vehicles and tow all commercial vehicles, regardless of weight. On the non-commercial side, the Class A license allows the operation and towing of all vehicles and trailers except commercial vehicles, motorcycles and other vehicles requiring additional sponsorships. Motorcycle driving requires an M license. In California, for example, an M1 license is required to operate standard motorcycles and M2 licenses are necessary for motorized bicycles. The basic license classes remain mostly the same from country to country. Slight differences may occur in weight restrictions for action and drag. Some states may have special licenses for new drivers (e.g. a Class D license in Georgia) and some special vehicles like a fire truck (e.g. a Class A fire fighter license in California). Not all states have two separate types of motorcycle licenses. No matter what type of license you apply for, you'll have to pass a written test and a road test. States often require young drivers to obtain initial sea permits, as well. Many DMVs offer sample written tests to help you prepare. All license departments also require application forms, age and name proof, vision tests, and various fees for unprompted licenses, a permit usually granted if you pass the written tests. After a certain period of practice, you must return to the DMV and pass the road test. To obtain a non-commercial Class A or Class B license, you must already have a Class C license in good condition and adhere to additional requirements. For commercial licenses, most states require background checks and road inspections with commercial driving testing centers. To pass the commercial driving test, you will need to pass a vehicle test and basic skills/driving tests, depending on the specific class. Motorcycle licenses also begin with the permit process. After a period of practice, you must pass both a written test and a motorcycle skills test. Age restrictions on certain types of licenses vary by country. With a type C license, you can't tow more than one car. C commercial licenses are required to transfer hazardous materials (see Section 6 for more details). Many countries have different age restrictions. The most common age limit is a curfew imposed on a new driver under a certain age. In West Virginia, drivers under the age of 21 have intrastate travel restrictions. Other restrictions include L (which restricts drivers to vehicles without air brakes) and N (a Class C restriction that would suspend the driver from running buses weighing 26,000 pounds or less). Endorsements are required to transfer certain materials, regardless of license The basic Class C license includes a P (passenger) certificate obtained through the standard road test. Transport Hazardous Materials is recognized by H (Hazardous Materials) support, N endorsements allow you to operate tanks, T endorsements allow you to operate duplicates/triangles, and F certification allows you to operate motorcycles (as opposed to motorcycle license only M). A license).
