

I'm not robot

Continue

Jewel in the crown of the british empire

If you are looking for a career that involves travel, profitable sales and beautiful merchandise, you should consider appealing in jewellery. Being a jewelry you can interact with interesting people from all over the world and work with some of the most beautiful gems in the world. Read the tips below and learn about how you can become a jewelry. Passion As with all areas of sales, you must have a passion for your product to succeed. If you are zeal for jewelry, precious gems and expensive metals, you will pass as a jewelry. Education There are a number of courses you can take to become a certified jewelry. The Gemological Institute of America offers a number of courses in assessment, diamonds, colored stones and pearls that will provide you with the knowledge and sale techniques needed to operate a leader in the jewelry [source: GIA]. Subscribe to industry magazines In order to keep on top of the industry trends and the latest news in the jewelry world, it is best to subscribe to a number of magazines. Jewelry's circular Keystone is the industry authority on news updates, market forecasts and issues facing the industry. In a business that is largely influenced by politics, fashion and geography, it is advisable to date with the news [source: JCK]. Join organizations depending on where you live, there are many organizations in place to ensure that you have a network of support and reliable information. The Jewelers of America are a council that creates and maintains a code of conduct and professional practices for the industry. Joining the YES will enable you to promote your business, protect your reputation and communicate with other professionals in your field [source: YES]. Ad Li Ka-Shing, Hong Kong's Superman octogenarian investor, continues its sale China, buying Europe strategy with a massive deal with will transform its Hutchison Whampoa holding company into Britain's largest mobile telecom provider. In a statement to the Hong Kong Stock Exchange, Hutchison said it would pay £9.25 billion ($13.88 billion) in cash to Spain's Telefonica for O2 and an additional £1 billion after the deal closed if the joint cash flow of the two companies reached a predetermined level. It is the latest in a string of iconoclastic acquisitions by Li in outside Asia, and in Britain in particular. Li doesn't buy trophy assets like hotels or high-end retail brands, which often draw wealthy investors from emerging markets. Instead, he is the disintegrating of a portfolio of nuts-and-bolts companies that are an integral part of the daily life of many citizens in the countries where they work. The net result is a menu of asset with less flash, and less volatility than any other compiled by its emerging marketmates. In recent years Li's Power Assets have bought: great interests in Northern North Networks, which own North England gas distribution network Seabank Power, An electricity generator in BristolEDF's electricity distribution network for London, and east and southeastern EnglandWales & West Utilities Limited, the gas distribution network in Wales and south-west England Companies controlled by Li also has $3.9 billion in 2011 for Northumbrian Water. Providing water and sewage service to 2.7 million Brits.Earlier this week, Li's CK Investments Eversholt Rail Group, which owns about a third of the UK's passenger rail cars, bought into a deal worth $3.3 billion. The strategy is not limited to Britain. In May, companies controlled by Li acquired Australian gas distribution Envestra for A$2.4 billion ($1.93 billion). And Cheung Kong Infrastructure and Power Assets, both controlled by Li, are reportedly offering for Swedish power distribution assets of Finnish electricity company Fortum, and have borrowed as much as $6 billion for the deal. Telecommunications, while not as heavily regulated as electricity, power and water companies, are often solid revenue generators that rely on large, stable customer bases. In Britain, tight competition in the telecommunications sector has driven profits, but today's deal effectively eliminates one of four companies in the industry. The O2 deal follows Li's reorganization of its expansive corporate empire in two listed companies, one that focuses on property and the other on everything, earlier this month. That reorganization added almost $2.3 billion to Li's personal fortune almost immediately, forbes reports. Many of the credit card deals appearing on the website are from credit card companies from which ThePointsGuy.com receive remuneration. This remuneration can have an impact on how and where products appear on this website (including the order in which it appears). This website does not include all credit card companies or all available credit card offerings. Please view our advertising policy page for more information. Editorial Note: Opinions expressed here are the author's alone, not that of any bank, credit card issuer, airlines or hotel chain, and have not been reviewed, approved or otherwise endorsed by any of these entities. Do you ever wonder why you see more colorful gems on the British royal family's crown jewels than diamonds? Blame it on strange beehive. Since medieval times, the royals have given in the idea that these gems can help them manifest realities, get prosperity, and even make them powerful. Curious to know more? We share the strange reasons why the British royal family use gems in his crown jewels. 1. They appreciate precious gems for protection The British family has a collection of precious gems. | Michael Ukas-Pool/Getty Images In addition to diamonds, the British royal family's gems are filled with a precious gems, including rubles, sappaffiers and refurbances. Dating back to the beliefs of their medieval ancestors, these precious gems are said to provide a veil of protection, among other metaphonic properties, about members of royalty. Next: The real reason for sappier in Princess Diana's ring. 2. Princess Diana's engagement ring The sapptule is known as a stone loyalty and devotion. | Arthur Edwards-WPA Pool/Getty Images Perhaps one of the most powerful healing crystals out there, sapphire is the focal point of Princess Diana's - now Kate Middleton's - engagement ring. But its rich color and beauty may not be the only reason the stone was chosen for the late princess. Known as the stone of loyalty and dedication, engagement rings often include a sappier (such as Princess Diana's), as it can help deepen devotion, bring peace, and help those who carry it find confidence in fulfilling their destiny. In addition, sapphy is believed to bring financial abundance and stability — something that zeros many kings and queens throughout history. Next: They didn't beg the Queen's crown of coronation for nothing. 3. Ruby for the protection of Queen Elizabeth's coronation crown was 2.3 pounds. | STF/AFP/Getty Images Heavy is the head that wears the crown, and the Queen's coronation crown added about 2.3 pounds to hair. Decorated with 2,901 precious stones — including, sappaffees, rubles and shades — represents the crown of sovereoility of the monarchy. There have been several types of crown since the 15th century (although hair dates back to 1937). One important component of the crown? A large 170 karat ruby, in the middle of the crown. Used throughout the British royalty for nearly 500 years, some say rubles represent a variety of important features for royalty, including courage, power, and protection against poison and other accidents. Next: The Queen's favorite stone 4. Smeralds for prosperity Queen Elizabeth favours sleeve. | Peter Macdiarmid/Getty Images Known as the gem of kings, many members of royalty have used smears throughout history to bring prosperity, prospect and love. The rare stone is a favorite among royalty, including Queen Elizabeth II. In fact, she has a remarkable collection of remarkable jewelry, including a beautiful tiara with tear-footed tiles. Next: A common but powerful stone 5. Diamonds is a Queen's best friend Diamonds are important components of the royals' jewel collection. | Jack Guez/AFP/Getty Images While royalty can appreciate live crystals and gems about diamonds, their diamonds are still important components of their gems and protection. They represent stability, victory and courage. Next: A stone named after royalty 6. The Stone Royals You aesteysts on St Edward's crown. | Jack Hill-WPA Pool/Getty Images Although diamonds, rubies, rubies, and smerals can be favorites of the royal family, they also used aethysts throughout history. Considered a stone royalty and symbolic of priesthood and kingship, you can place the deep purple stone on many crown jews, including St Edward's crown. Next: The royal family aren't the only royals with belief surrounding their gems. 7. They are not the only royalty to use crystals in their crown jewelry Cleopatra use gems and crystals for their metaphorical properties. | Hulton Archive/Getty Images Used by Kings and Queens Since ancient times, the British royal family is not the only one to seek crystals' metaphysical properties. One of the most washable members of royalty to meet their metaphorical properties? Cleopatra. From smearing agents to lapis lazuli, the ancient Egyptian queen used crystals and gems in her life for protection, prosperity and wisdom. Check out The Cheat Skin on Facebook! The human heart feels things that the eyes can't see, and know what the mind can't understand, says Robert Valett. To me, it's so true. I may not describe the wonderful experiences I have, nowadays, but I can surely give a name to the place where they happen: Belize, the Central American country known by its people as The Jewel. If I heard this term when I arrived in Belize two years ago, I wouldn't have understood what it meant. And some experiences led me to think that this country may have earned a name that it wasn't entitled to... Maybe it's not such a gem of a place to be after all. No, this land doesn't shimmer all the time... what place do? And we know that, even if it has done, all that glitters are not gold. Even a diamond has rough edges. But the longer I live here, and the more people I meet here from all over the world, and the more multi-cultural I experience... the more I can see and feel the sparks that make Belize shine. In my pursuit of the best living on a single senior's modest income, I wanted to find a peaceful lifestyle in a beautiful place with hot weather and palm trees floating in breeze. I also wanted the option to live in a mountainous terrain, soft with green. Being near a great body of water is dear in my heart... and not just for the sandy beaches—although Belize has more than his righteous part of them. I want to be able to see waves in constant movement and to see how the coast shines when the sun reflects on it at any time of the day. And, because no husband or wife should be an island, I like being in an area where I can meet new people and where it's easy to turn strangers into friends. Others like a more isolated lifestyle. Fortunately, all of these things in Belize can be Be. I learned to be flexible about my expectations in some areas... There are foods I had to learn to live without Utz potato chips and and Tastykakes were some of my specific favorites before you move down here. What did I have to do? These were important items in my life before my move to Belize! Fortunately, my son remembers sending me care packages when he served in the military overseas. Now, he sends me care packages from time to time with my beloved snacks. This is a big deal at the local post office when I receive one of these gifts. I open the box while I'm still there and share goodies with whoever is around, sharing the wealth as the gem of Belize part hair. And I learned to accept others and their reasons to get away from their hometowns, whether permanent or just for a while. Travel is such a valuable education and a way to be exposed to new and exciting adventures. Enjoying all these things helps me to appreciate life more completely, even during the times when I can't explain how or why. Just recently, a lady and her husband arrived in Corozal and rented a place in the road from where I live. They are retired, but determined to maintain a full and adventurous life. They give themselves a few months to try out this part of the country to see if it fits the lifestyle they're looking for. The woman is a real go-getter! Someone recommended she search me out because I lived in the area and was helpful for other newbies in the past. What a wonderful encounter it was. It wasn't long before we realized how much we had in common. We are both of great cities in the United States, retired from rewarding work in the social services arena, do not enjoy cooking, and love the pool. Before long we swmed and did water aerobics in a nearby pool with a waterfall! It was during this time from a personal guide to this lady that I reminded of some of the reasons why the atmosphere of Belize is so hard to describe. For example, my heart was opened time after time by the kindness of the locals and the hospitality of the many expats to a total stranger. My newfound friend already feels relaxed in her new home away from home - and her knees blow a sigh of relief away from the cold. Not long ago, I wondered if the novelty of life began to go down in Belize. However, since I had an opportunity to personally show someone the attractions, the sounds and the delicious smells of local foods, I know that I want to continue to enjoy the uniqueness that Belize offers. I just may not be able to describe it sufficiently to someone who is not here... You have to experience it for yourself - then let's see how easy it is for you to describe this gem known as Belize! Marie Peay Belize Insider Comments Comments

