Malthael diablo 3 cinematic

Edit Share Cutscenes or Cinematography are points in the Diablo series where a special event takes place where requires a short film to better explain or increase interest in an upcoming event.
Diablo I [edit | edit source]
The few cutscenes in Diablo I was basically used to show upcoming battles. There were only two cutscenes in the last game. The first was a film sequence showing Archbishop Lazarus at tristram cathedral's altar, apparently obsessed with Diablo. This led to the player's confrontation with Lazarus and his succubus guards. In the second and final cutscene, it shows Diablo's death as his body crumbles to ashes and the young Prince Albrecht is released from his torment. While in the scene, the character is shown stabbing himself in the forehead to contain Diablo evil. This scene is remarkable because originally, all three character classes had their own version of this scene, but the final version of the game only featured warrior's scene, further reinforcing the fact that Dark Wanderer is in fact, The Warrior from Diablo I. A final scene shows Dark Wanderer as his fate explained by a narrator.

Deleted scenes[edit | edit source]
At enter the lair of the Butcher in the cathedral, a cinematic would be shown by him hacking the body of a dead villager and hooking it on the wall. Unfortunately, this was never placed in the last game. Although it can be seen in Diablo Spawn - a demo of the game. The clip can be seen here:
The second off cutscene was one of Diablo gaining power if the hero failed map of the stars quest. It was removed because the quest itself was taken out of the game, because the developers felt it destroyed the player-driven nature of the game.
Diablo: Hellfire[edit | edit source]
The Hellfire expansion for Diablo came with a new cinematic, related to Na-Krul. It represented Na-Krul called into the Sanctuary.
Diablo I[edit | edit source]
Diablo II took cutscenes to a new level, with improved graphics and showing more interest in revealing the plot. At the beginning of each act, the narrator, a mad old man named Marius, tells Baal (believe him to be Tyrael), why he could not complete the task of bringing the Soulstone of Baal to Hellforge to be destroyed.

Diablo II: Lord of Destruction [edit | edit source]
The Lord of Destruction expansion brought two more film sequences to the sequel, both of which were highly praised for their quality and content in many game reviews. The first epic scene showed Baal, now in its true form the powers of his Soulstone, and the demonic legion invades Mount Arreat. Their ascent is the obstacle at the gates of Barbarian Capital, Sescheron, by an old, but brave barbarian guard. The guard tries to convince Baal to turn back, so that the barbarian Hordes within the city wipe out the legion. Baal thinks about the proposal and continues to literally explode the guard as his response with his Mana Rift spell. Then the legion pours into the gates hack away at all that stands in their way. The final cutscene featured enigmatic Archangel Tyrael, dressed in a new costume and spectacular wing effects, trying to save sanctuary from Worldstone corruption by destroying it. This cutscene can play a big role in determining the plot of Diablo III. The music and direction of this place has been praised by fans and critics alike. The expansion ends in a clip hanger, like all previous releases.

Tyrael : [opening cinematic]
Diablo was defeated. For a time it seemed like we were going to know peace. But it wasn't going to be... for Diablo essence lingers in Black Soulstone. I cannot destroy the stone, nor let its evil remain in the Heavens. And so, it must be hidden... even from the angels. I pray that's enough.
Tyrael : [Cut to the Tomb of Rakkis, where four hooded figures hold the Black Soulstone at the ends of their spears, until they place it within their vesse]
You have done well, Horadrim. Your service here is. You should all...
Tyrael : [the four Horadrim near the stone, and two more near the door, excited to hear any strategy] ... Run.
Tyrael : [the approaching figure enters the room - an angel in dark vestments, who carries a pair of sickle-like leaves]
Malthael. Tyrael : [Malthael's hood tilts slightly to one side, before he decapitates the two Horadrim near the door, unleashing a death mist. Tyrael creates a shield with his angelic sword and turns to Horadrim behind him]
Go! Go! Find Nephalem!
Tyrael : [the Horadrim runs, while Tyrael watches in horror as one of the others has his soul taken by Malthael. Keeping its sword out, it passes through the dark angel as if nothing. Malthael disarms him, lifts him up one of his cutters, and pulls out his soul essence with the other]
Brother ... Why?
Tyrael : [Malthael examines the soul essence, then looks back at Tyrael... before throwing him aside and approaching Black Soulstone]
The Nephalem...
~will~ stop you.
Malthael : [sinister]
No one can stop Death.
