For those who live alone or for people who are worried about falls and are unable to call for help, the wearable pendant's Man Down feature detects when the user has fallen and, after 10 seconds of silence, will go through and call the list of pre-programmed emergency contacts. The carrier and emergency contact can then communicate via the pendant. The pendant rings to indicate that the Man Down feature has been enabled and can be disabled if they don't need help. DECT Technology Unamplified phone with a communication pendant 2 ways stronger than the average of the volume of calls with SOS button Automatic activation of the speaker during calling SOS Logic dedicated to the flow of SOS calls disconnects any active call, so that emergency numbers can be formed Waterproof pendant can be worn in the shower (do not sink in water, would be while bathing) Pendant dimensions : 2.2 x 1.5 x 0.6 British female voice calls for ease of operation emergency contacts: 3 Waiting time: 3 days Range up to 130 ft backup battery 8-12 hours, depending on battery quality (4 AAA NiMH batteries not included) Man down detection in pendant starts automatic calling emergency contacts if the user falls and still sets for 10 seconds Alarm pills is a countdown alarm which can be set 4 times a day in 4-hour intervals Pendant with Battery Basic Unit Lanyard Power Adapter [Click for user manual] Instructions need some review of the work of Jerre My whole family could not figure out the instructions and even my cousin from South Dakota tried - they wanted to send it back , but actually it's not that complicated, and can be set to default settings, which are great except you don't want that stupid ringtone, or man down feature (at least it's not for us), but they can be turned on or on easily once you know how to do it. The instructions are helpful (you can't figure it out without them), but they're weird, weird, weird. Total. Also, the voice of the SOS message is He was given four stars because this is a company that has everything right. (Posted on 05.08.2019) Works for Peace of mind Review of Catsandcounting Easy Program. And it works that way it was announced. But the function of man down is too sensitive. It goes off if one leans back into the recliner or goes to bed. If your loved one has memory problems and doesn't know how to cancel button and move the pendant to an upright position, then continue to alert. Also, if her loved one has memory problems someone needs to visit the person or remember to put the pendant on the charge. My mom often doesn't know why she went on alert, so when she calls me she doesn't cancel the alert. One last element. This device has a British English accent. If you listen to the recording a few times you can catch on and understand the message, but ter is a learning curve to the computerized accent. My mother doesn't know anything. Therefore, when she hears she can not understand the difference between a regular alert and a medication reminder. (Posted on May 29, 2018) Okay, except Man Down's review function well, except for The Man Down function no monthly fees. The beam's good. Man Down > 30 degrees too banal to be useful. Constant false alarms. The voice is hard to understand and very English accent. (Posted on 27.12.2017) Write your own review ©2020 Walmart Magazine, Inc. Inc.
