Microwave ovens are a type of wave that is sandwiched between radio waves and infrared radiation on the electromagnetic spectrum. In the case of microwave ovens, the widely used wave frequency is approximately 2,450 megahertz (2.45 gigahertz). Waves in this frequency range have an interesting property: they are absorbed by water, fats and sugars. After absorption, they are transformed directly into the atomic movement - heat. These waves boast another interesting, related property, too: They don't absorb most plastics, glass or ceramics. The metal reflects the microwave, so the metal pans don't work well in the microwave. This is also why the devices have metal walls - for thought. Advertising If you can't think of a smart way to store them, the user's guide is kind of a hassle to keep around. When you find yourself in need of one, however, The Central Guide allows you to find and download them for free in PDF format.
