She was born in London in 1797, the daughter of William Godwin and Mary Wollstonecraft, famous radical writers of the time. Maria's mother tragically died eleven days after giving birth. Under Godwin's conscious and specialized care, Maria had an intellectually stimulating, albeit emotionally needed, childhood. In 1814, she met the then unknown Percy Byshe Shelley, whom she soon fell in love with, and in July of that year they fled to the mainland. In December 1816, after Shelley's first wife Harriet committed suicide, Mary and Percy married. Of the couple's four children, only Percy Florence survived. They lived in Italy between 1818 and 1822, when Shelley drowned in the sinking of her boat Ariel during a storm. Mary returned from Percy Shelley on the shores of Lake Geneva, where Lord Byron also lived. The incentive for him to start writing the original story came after Byron offered a ghost story to the contest. Byron himself produced The Fragment, which later inspired his doctor, John Polydori, to write Vampire: A Tale. Back in England, Mary completed her story, published as Frankenstein or Modern Prometheus, in 1818. His other novels include The Last Man, the dystopian story of the 21st century (1835), and Falkner (1837). In addition to several collaborations, with short stories and essays for publications such as The Keepsake and the Westminster Review, he has contributed several biographical essays for the Cabinet of Cyclopaedia (1835, 1838-9), edited by Dionysius Lardner. His other books include the first edition of P.B. Shelley's poetry (4 vols., 1839) and a book based on Maria's travels through Europe with Percy Florence and her son's friends, Rumbles in Germany and Italy (1844). Mary Shelley died in London on 10 February 1851.
