We've all seen it in the movies. But is it real? No matter how useful the technologies you see in cinemas are; Much of what you see in the movies can't be done in real life. In real life, for people like you and I, there is simply no way to find a mobile device by entering its phone number or IMEI number. Present! If this is possible, it will be a huge privacy issue for any person carrying a phone. So, how do the police do that? Mobile phones are constantly searched and connected to the nearest antennas operated by the phone company. Most, if not all, telephone companies will record which antennas their subscribers are connected to. These recordings allow you to trace the device to the tower on it. Depending on the physical location of the antenna, you can give an approximate estimate of the actual location of the phone. Records are stored about phones connecting to antennas, allowing the device to be traced to the tower it is on, and based on the physical location of the antenna, an approximate estimate can be given and then the location of the cell phone triangulated from several surrounding towers. Because of the number of towers it is easier in urban areas. Obviously, this information is not available to the public, but can be used by law enforcement to give a fairly accurate assessment of the phone's last physical location. Turn the Oppo A37f into a real-time GPS tracker. As? Simply install the LocationOf GPS Tracker app on oppo A37f to view and monitor its location online.
