V words to describe someone

Image: Lumina Images/Blend Images/Getty Images They say that beauty is in the eye of the beholder, but they never describe a wide variety of beauty. This is because the concept is constantly evolving and deepening personally. Fortunately, there is no one-size-all version of it. Everyone fits one or more groups, but the results can vary depending on the person who committed the judgment. There are also those who base beauty from their natural appearance and others who think beauty involves embracing the latest makeup and stylistic trends. Once you add internal beauty to the mixture, things get more complicated. Perhaps you're more of a natural beauty that launches a glowing smile and ready to take on that day. Perhaps you're more of a classic beauty that has eternal pleasure. Then again, your beauty can be a mystery and hard to move on. Do you know what the best words describe your personal beauty? Will it be a word you have received as a passing compliment, or will you be surprised by the result? If you're ready to find out, take this quiz! Company Preparation System1 is the key when a trader asks, What words would you use to describe yourself? The question is almost hard to answer as the dreaded interview opener, Tell me about yourself. But you don't want to give a two or three-word answer, for fear that you ignore the saying and it's over yourself to decide how you want to answer the question. The words you use can depend on the type of job you're interviewing, what others are saying about you or where you see yourself on your career track. Use words that match the most important qualifications for the job. For example, if you apply for a hotel housekeeping position, consider using words such as caution, caring or efficiently. These are features that will service you in a position where company expectations are for employees to follow strict procedures for work tasks such as cleaning, hotel guest services and managing the amount of time they spend on several projects per day. Think about the words your colleagues use to describe you. Using words based on other people's perceptions can carry more weight than trying to trigger words that might make you out of the braggart or immodest. When the creator asks for one such word, you can say, My colleagues usually tell me I am the most trustworthy member of our team, because I can count on draw my weight and then a few when we have team assignments. In this case, it is desirable to describe the reason for choosing the word. Use words that will help you get the promotion if you interview for a job with your current employer. Words like dying, dedicated or loyal describe features that will benefit you in the long run, especially if you interview for a job in the same company. Words like this reinforce your commitment to the company and remind hiring managers why promoting internal candidates can benefit organizations more than making job offers to outside candidates. Take an attribute inventory for which you are most proud and preface a one-word answer with, at risk of becoming immoral, I consider myself to be.... Continue your answers to testament questions with words or terms such as detailed, collaborative or innovative oriented. This is the kind of word that suggests what you bring to the company -- avoid choosing words that really aren't the most immodest. Such a response, At risk of becoming an immodest, I consider myself a perfect employee. is off-putting because it may not be true because the employee -- no matter how hard you work -- isn't perfect. About Author Ruth Mayhew has been writing since the mid-1980s, and she has been an HR things specialist since 1995. His work appeared in the Diverse Workforce in the Healthcare Industry, and he has been cited in various publications, including journals and textbooks focused on human resource management practices. He holds a Master of Arts degree in sociology from the University of Missouri-Kansas City. Ruth settled in the capital, Washington, D.C. Not long ago, Comstock, 46, was conducting marketing at General Electric; We he thanked eoaigation. He moved into the NBC Universal GE unit 18 months ago, and only got a new gig that combines ad sales and digital media across TV networks, cable channels, and movie studios. Want to stream Heroes, read interactive novels, then bid online for artwork from the show? Thank you Comstock for all that too. Television economy was once easy. Do you understand how to make money today, when I can watch 30 Rock pretty much anytime? We understand it much better than we used to be. Digital media allows us to open new windows without cannibalization you might expect. So yeah, we can offer 30 Miles in previews, then in the air, then streaming, then iTunes, then mobile, and then syndicate. We've done modelling. It looks like we're going to make more money. How do advertisers revolve around this new world? Some know what they want, some are lacking so. But now, every targeter does digital, not because it's fashionable, but because they need to. The purchase group has created a unit called vision, sound, and motion [to work in the media]. They expect us to zero in targeted users: What do we know about them, and how do we achieve them? How to see habits change? We have 60 million streams [TV shows] on NBC.com. A lot of them are repeat audiences. The other is the time of shifting. They also switch, with iTunes or on the phone. And does that work for you? It's necessary. If users are in control, they'll figure out how they want to watch. We need to find the right solution. What's the next new thing? A more personal expression [by the audience], the desire to engage in storytelling. Like, SMS-text to vote in a reality show, or watch a hero and dial a phone number. The thing is so rudimentary; we'll look back one day and say, We're so cute then! All this implies a huge cultural change. How does NBC Universal prevail? This space is frenetic and chaotic, and we're always trying to get out of our own way. With success, you get a little more confident. But we still need to be more focused and more disciplined. Are you still, as you ever said yourself, frickin' impatient? Yes. And I'm afraid. I always scan the landscape. What's the next new thing? Who's going to get there first? This business is such hypersensitive. You have to choose a way, keep it, and feel good about it. The second guess will end with more than ulcers. Ulcers.
