Throughout the story, Scribble goes to different pictures and asks if he can play with them. The pictures say no and show that the doodles look different than them and are more messy and colorful. Doodles stay true to themselves, and won't let them get him down. At the end of the story, other pictures excuse Doodles and ask him to play with them. The pictures create a big, beautiful picture because they all work together. Students will love this story about diversity and stay true to themselves.
