Some are really well received, like fighterz, and others not so much. When I found out there was an official mobile dragon ball game I was sure it would be a poorly made cash grab of a game. I was very wrong. While it is true that you can buy an in-game premium currency in the form of dragon stones it is not quite necessary to buy them. They are quite accessible if you are willing to set in motion. I myself have only spent a small amount of money on the game and only when there is a big discount. Even without spending a lot of money on it I have over 100 top tier characters and after years of gaming I still have a lot of fun. It can be very grindy at times and there are sometimes in between events that can be really boring if you are high level and have most of the story stuff done. But there are almost always events of some sort going on, and there's almost always a new exciting character to summon, as that's how the game supports itself. Overall, it's a really fun game that gives a real sense of achievement when you finally hit a really tough event or paint to buy something big in the baba store. Of all the dragon ball games created up to this point, it's probably the one with the most work put into it, and the most balanced of all. It's really a good game and I highly recommend it to any dragon ball fans out there. Let's start with the only bad thing here. It's Pay to win. Now that it's out of the way. Let's talk about all the good this game has to offer. Game with a very unique twist on the usual beat em ups. This is refreshingly refreshing Say the least, since most of us Dragon Ball fans are used to the fact that the formula for these games and the mechanic can either make or break the game. You collect these balls that let you get ki for your ki meter that can be seen when you are fighting something. This game also comes with its own story mode, can be completely f2p if the person then chooses (which is still viable to this day), and new things are added all the time. Sure, you can empty your wallet of money in this game to get rare characters you want, but the game already gives you lots of dragon stones (this game Gotcha currency). Each of the story missions gives you three stones, and there are almost always events that give you special missions to get more stones. I'd say it's worth it to paint a bit and serve a bit. It makes the experience of the game more real and fun. As a player myself who has trash luck, you can always get the best out of your situations. That's why there are so many ways to play this game. And it's still being updated and changed! In my opinion, this is one of the best Dragon Ball games of the time. Just look past that endurance issue... I have been playing since the global version was released and have logged in 90% of these days since it was released. I've seen this game grow into something big. Compared to other mobile anime summon type game Dokkan takes the second of a lot. You can spend zero money on this game and still have a great time, good grades, and enough stones to summon. The addition of a guaranteed SSR character on an x50 stone writ is huge and was the biggest step in the right direction. Also, the inclusion of rates was huge too. When it's party time either monthly or annually they give out frankly more than enough stones if you want to summon or save. This past 5 years of celebration has been the best yet and I expect to be better than the last one every time. You can skip the monthly banners and save your stones because when the big annual celebrations hit you are treated to amazing subpoenas with tickets, lots of stones, and content, then you can summon on banners and get the monthly Dokkan signs you missed. Finally, the coin system with 10 coins per 50 stone multi is monumental because it does push you summon more, but there is an end goal in mind. Thank you Dokkan you have built memories, clocked time when bored, generated hype, and have created an amazing experience overall. I can't wait to see what's in store years down the line!
