Cauliflower crust pizza costco price

CLEVELAND, Ohio - Friends sometimes call me and suggest a new product they noticed was gluten-free. And sometimes more than one person will suggest the same thing. But if I had a dime for every time someone told me to try this pizza... Well, I'll probably have a dollar, but still. I clearly need to get my hands on it. So on a recent trip to Costco I took it over to the frozen food division and picked up a two-pack of Milton's Craft Bakers Roasted Vegetable Cauliflower Crust Pizza. To, two flavors by this brand are offered at Costco - Roasted Vegetables and Margherita. I just saw roasted vegetables at my local Costco, so it made for an easy choice. Both pizza varieties are certified gluten-free and cost $14 for a two-pack. When purchasing the pizzas the cashier informed me this need to stay flat. So whether you're charging the pizzas in your car or in your freezer, make sure they stay horizontally. Some customers apparently have problems with the pizza folding over on itself in the box, so it's better to be safe than sorry. When I open the pizza, I first noticed that it doesn't really look like the pizza on the box. When is there ever more top coat on the product than in the picture? Just look at the image above. Needless to say, the pizza was down to a big beginning. After heating the oven to 425 degrees, boil it for 15 minutes and let it cool slightly, it was time to eat it. This pizza isn't just good, it's really good. So well in fact I almost forgot it's a cauliflower crust. When cauliflower pizzas first came to the market, they were flavourless and fell apart before you even had a chance to chew. But not this one. It's so thorough and firm at the same time, I wouldn't believe it was a cauliflower crust if I hadn't put it myself in the oven. But while the cauliflower crust brings a healthy lower calorie twist to a traditional pizza, it is still heavy in carbohydrates and sodium. One ministry, which is generously a quarter of the entire paste, comes in at 230 calories, 8 grams of fat, 570 milligram sodium and 27 grams of carbohydrates. However, a Pizza is not just a crust. It's also all that's about it. And it doesn't disappoint, however. With zucchini, onions, red, yellow and green bell peppers, as well as three cheeses, the excellent crust serves as a vehicle with high quality and abundant toppings. It looks like everyone is raving about this pizza and after I'm trying it myself, I'm too. Have you tried Milton's Craft Bakers gluten-free cauliflower crust pizza?
