The democratic structure of government, as we have, requires power-sharing. Democracy, on the whole, belongs to a system of government where no person or group is all-important. History has seen people and groups of power plunge into the depths of corruption, which ultimately leads to the fall of the group and society as a whole. The separation of powers here belongs to the three bodies of our democratic system, dividing power and keeping control of each other's activities. The three main bodies are the judiciary, the legislature and the executive branch. Read carefully and decide the exercises included at the end of the chapter to get the best out of the subject and ace your exam board. Chapter 2 - FederalismFederalism is a concept that is an integral part of our society. In the previous chapter, you learned about vertical power sharing. Similarly, federalism is also a power-sharing system. This is a system of government in which there are two types of governing body - the state government and the central government. In this chapter you will also learn how they work in tandem and the benefits of a federal system in a country like India.
