From time to time, when time comes to me, I will increase my gallery of works. Hope you'll like it. Andrea, who took refuge in a Colombian camp with her two children and her partner, will return to Peruvian television as host of the pet show. Here he tells us about his The interview was arranged by 10 a.m. Andrea arrives with a washed face, without a drop of makeup. A paired skirt and blue cover her petite figure. We offer wine, but she rejects it. I like it terribly. Ever since I had Muriel, I've started to feel bad, now with Amaru it's worse, she says. Instead, order matte and a little fried mushrooms. She's a vegetarian. It's not like Andrea is someone else. It is that she admits that the years have made her grow up and grow up to the point that she does not reject her past, but accepts it as part of the process that helped her become who she is now, a woman of serene beauty, a mother of two young and who cares for her home with the dedication of those who understood her priorities in life. This year he will be returning to Peru every month to record the hasta las Patas pet program. We took her first visit to talk to her and update us. Now, however, you are a mother, a yoga instructor, and you live in the countryside. What was your process of change? - I have been taken by angels, God or life, I do not mean a specific name, but I think there is a force that takes you so that you do not want it. If I hadn't left Peru, I wouldn't have the peace of mind to live so many processes of change. I don't even know if he gave me a chance to have kids. Maybe I would still be the same person everyone wanted me to be, because that's how I satisfied their curiosity Q you knew about your own changes or just got carried away? It was kind of conscious, but I think the change was not violent, but smooth and gradual. Man remains the same person, only he expands his consciousness and knowledge. The same process of maturation and aging that happens to the body, occurs with the mind and emotions. There is great awareness and character adapting to this wisdom. But you left everything and everyone.- Getting to Colombia was a respite at the time because no one knew me. Also, all the women are divine there, so I wasn't the most beautiful. And if you come out naked in the environment, it doesn't matter because they all do. The field thing came very easily. Once I got tired of being in the city - my apartment was in the middle - full of smoke and where the thefts were daily bread. I didn't want to live like this anymore. I wanted to see the plants, feel the sun, have breakfast in the garden. And I left. I believe that working with the land, sowing, harvesting and having my animals were fundamental processes in my life. That's the only way I realized it was much more than the press, the pictures and the fame. Q you that in Lima, before you left, there was more talk about your personal life than your job? People to a public figure in a fractured manner. The image that is made of man is very superficial. In my case, my story has always been a little distorted. Everyone thought that one day I lived as I was seen. But I really wasn't. A few things happened to me because I didn't have the tools to handle my depression, I was very young. Also, I think anyone who has ever felt contempt has ever got drunk. The difference is, you had cameras around. It's not true. I've always been an unsociable person. I love being alone. I like to have space to think and read. I love reading. One of the weirdest things I've ever missed before motherhood is being able to read alone, eat a liter of coffee and read. It was really my big vice. In 2004, Andrea went to Colombia to star in the television series The Widow of the Mafia. The beautiful actress ended up staying in the country of coffee. He left his job in Peru. Prior to that time, he had appeared in four novels and one film. You did modeling, acting, driving.- I did a lot of things that didn't interest me. When it all started, I was a little girl from home, from Lins, a super-strict family girl, a dad and a mom who didn't know the streets because they didn't let me out alone. Then I entered the world of modeling and the artistic environment, where there is everything from drinking and drugs to parties, rumba and romance. All together. I got there and got carried away at the time. I can't blame anything. It's just that I feel that this Andrea wouldn't be possible without other Andrea.Q don't you blame your suicide attempt either? - The system puts a lot of pressure on the person. I think it's natural to want to die sometimes. Maybe for me death is not a dramatic thing, and the desire to die is not bad. Wanting to die physically is a metaphor for what happens to one spiritually, it's like wanting to be born again, renewing myself.-Change of plumage.-What I feel is that the relationship with death is permanent and beautiful as a relationship with life. Death is even positive. I think I wanted to die at the time. I wanted to be someone else, to make room for something new. It was something in my life, part of my journey. I can't hate any season, on the contrary, bless this station because it took me to another, Q you would be a person you are now without these experiences? It's impossible because I do it all. I'm theater, I'm a success, I'm suicidal, I'm born, I'm death, I'm a girl, I'm a life. There are so many things that make up the creature. I'm so sure I wanted to die because I really died. I hope I can die. sometimes, stop being who I am now to become a different person who can embrace more things every time. Let the day I physically die will not be anything from another world. Mother-of-two - Muriel, 7, and Amaru, 1 - Andrea took a foot off the accelerator of her acting career to get up with both. Her babies are now her priority, Q you put off your acting career for being a mother? I didn't close the doors for acting. To believe that the sky of your profession can be touched only in thirty years, the myth is that you can touch it. Why can't I do it when I'm fifty? You know Meryl Streep has four kids? All these years he brought them up, retreated with them on the field. Then he went back to work. When I read this story, I was inspired. Why do we keep violence at the thought that our career ends when it comes to procreation? Who says 50 won't be my best time? How about maybe I win a prize of 60? Now I have the priority responsibility that my children have. You could say that's what the babysitters are there for.- At some point when I first had Muriel, I had an affair and had to leave her with a nanny. In the end I was so depressed that I said: This is not what I want. Not because the person who took care of her was bad, but I missed, for example, watching her walk for the first time. Q Do you have a serene life? - I try to be as calm as possible, which does not mean that I rest in a hammock. I have a lot more to do. I work as a yoga instructor, and they leave me with real business. I have to put a lot of physical and mental effort. I have to see my kids. Despite everything I have in the world because of everything I chose, no one told me that I should be like this.Q What is your daily life like? - I get up at 4am and do yoga. I also teach yoga classes every day for an hour. I make breakfast, I help Muriel, I take her to class, I give Amaru lactar, I make lunch, I wash my clothes, and in the afternoon when I and my family I organize various activities. At 9pm I fall out exhausted. Q you and Valery met? - At a friend's house we have in common, two and a half years ago we do yoga. Q did you like him? The moment I met him, he led a life with great introspection. That's what we're negotiating. I don't like very noisy people. Besides, I didn't have to wear a beautiful dress or make an impression on him. I always felt that everything was very authentic with him, very real. Real.
