Download of course, it seemed like the whole world was buzzing for a hot minute around the release of the iPhone X and iOS 11 - but didn't sleep on Android. Not only does the latest Google Pixel make a significant wave, but it's actually Android that's the most popular mobile platform in the world. Taking this into account, now is a good time as anyone to pick up some Android programming skills. With the full Android Developer Course - Build 14 Apps, you'll learn to design for Android M, Google's latest release platform. Whether you want to beef up your resume for promotion, find a new job, earn some side money or just learn a new hobby, this course shows you how to make real apps such as Uber and Instagram. Best of all, the lessons are all based on the project - it means that you get hands-on experience with the same techniques and tools that you will use to create new applications yourself. The course includes 17 sections, more than 232 lectures and 31.5 hours of content showing how to develop an app from start to finish. Whether you're learning how to send your creation to Google Play, marketing it through Google Ads, or learning how to use the latest Android M features such as App Resolve and Android Pay, this course is full of valuable lessons for a budding mobile entrepreneur. Don't repeat on the new feature: snag access to this Android developer course for $17, 91% of the usual price of $199. A smart shopper knows how to get cheap but great finds. If you think you could do better with your consumer skills, don't worry - your android device could be a help. Try downloading any of these apps and you will be able to organize your grocery store and mall activities as well The best deals in your area.1. ToMarket grocery store stores You are the type of person who keeps forgetting to buy something after you have left the grocery, then this app is for you. ToMarket will help you list everything down before you head. You can create your list by typing it directly into your phone by downloading a CSV file or voice command. Everything is customized; You can categorize items, and even down the aisle depending on the store you filter. It also has a barcode scanner, to-do list, and a coupon tracker. If you want to share your list via email or SMS, you can download the full version. ShopSavvy ShopSavvy is marketed as the original barcode scanner for Android, but it's definitely more than that. If you want a better price for a particular item, just use a keyword or scan the barcode and you'll get a list of online and brick-and-mortar places in your area that sells it as well as how it's priced in every store. You can check reviews to help you with your purchase, or you can add products that you like to the wish list and monitor price changes. ShopSavvy also saves your story for later viewing, and is integrated with Facebook and Twitter. It's a pretty good app for campaigning and casual shopping. Milo Local Shopping You probably experienced going to the mall only to find that what you wanted to buy was from the stock. Milo can help you avoid this problem by giving you access to store shelves in your area. Enter your keyword and the app will pull up nearby stores, and the amount of stock item you need. You will also get to compare prices so you know where you can get the best deal. Currently it only works in the US, but we hope that they have plans to bring it to international in the near future4. Shopkick Shopkick is a geolocation app with a spin - not to mention a freebie. Here's how it works: once you go to a partner store (such as Target), the app recognizes where you are, and immediately gives you kickbucks, which are reward points you need to accumulate in order to redeem gift cards or Facebook Credits. The good thing about it is that you can redeem anywhere, so you don't worry about finding a far branch store just to get free.5. Google Catalogs Google Directories is another great addition to the company's wide range of applications. Designed specifically for tablets, it offers you hundreds of directories to browse, allows you to shop from the comfort of the app, and gives you the opportunity to share items that you find interesting with friends via email. It is in constant development, so we can be sure that more catalogs will be added soon. Egg Drop Even If There Are Tons The apps out there, Egg Drop manages to differentiate themselves by focusing not only on what stores have for sale, but on what your neighbors are selling. Everything works in real real And if you have any questions, you can talk to the seller with an in-app message. Are you planning to sell something? You can instantly upload a photo of your item as well as its price and you are ready to go. It's almost like Craigslist, just more functional, and it's pretty nifty when it comes to finding the best deals around. If you are interested in online shopping but can't stay in place scanning auction sites all day long, then this app is for you. If you decide to do it online or in person, shopping can be either a fun sport or a huge pain. Depending on your personality, we've chosen some apps that will either help you become a master of shopping or just help you get through a must-go shopping trip. Either way, these apps will help you find your way around the mall, find the best price online, or look for something hard to find at your local store. We've created a list based on iOS apps, but many of them are available on Android. RedLaser, Free This app technology is used in almost every other app that has a barcode scanner, and for good reason. RedLaser quickly scans almost any barcode or code and is quickly looking for a website and local stores to find the best prices for everything you've just scanned. Users can create shopping lists and search by voice or photo if they can't find a barcode. Users can now even purchase items directly through the app on some sites. If you only have one app to purchase on your iPhone, this is the one that will have. Amazon Mobile, Free Since Amazon is one of the biggest retailers out there, it only makes sense that they will have one of the best shopping apps around. As expected, you can browse or search for products on Amazon, view all your account data, track orders, purchase items, and do whatever else you would have access to the web version. Users can also scan the barcode or take a picture of something to watch it through Amazon. Our experience with this was that it is accurate, fast and certainly helpful. We like the nice design, as well as the fact that the application is as full-featured as the site itself. Fastmall, Free For those times when you have to physically go out and shop in droves, Fastmall can come in handy. This app can help you find your way around real shopping malls without the need for either GPS or WiFi. The app has interactive maps for thousands of popular shopping malls, helping you get from store to store quickly and efficiently. You can even just shake your phone to see where the nearest toilet is. Users can add certain stores as and there is even a bargain section that will help you find discounts in the mall. We also like that this app has a function where I parked?, which records your GPS location and allows you to make a voice note. Sherpa Coupon, Free If You're a Bargain Hunter, Coupon Coupon This is a great app to download and check when you are out of stores. It offers a somewhat limited list of national chain stores and gives you instant access to any in-store coupons that the store currently offers. It doesn't have coupons for every store out there, but if we had to check it every time we were going to buy something at the mall, we would probably save a fair amount of money. Users can also browse coupons by selecting a grocery store, search for coupons by category, and add favorite stores to check coupons quickly and easily. Goodzer, Free This app is simple and doesn't have many bells and whistles, but it does a very good job of finding things locally that can be hard to find in a great app that does more. If you're looking for something specific and may be hard to find, this app will help you find exactly what you need within a few miles of range (or a larger range if you choose). The app contains product information for more than 2 million products, and when you search for a product you will be able to see the product, price, availability and get directions to the store of your choice. There is the possibility of online shopping for good comparison, but this app is best used to find something that is local. Stylebop, Free This app is perfect for luxury fashionistas out there who want a mobile app to browse and purchase the latest clothes and trends. Users can browse collections or different designers, see items in 360-degree photos, create a wish list of items and purchase them directly through the app. The app also has fun features such as Key Looks and Shop Look that offer inspiration as well as help find clothes from celebrity outfits. This app is not for everyone, but if you have a high side style, then Stylebop will be a useful personal assistant. eBay, Free This app does not include anything revolutionary, but it is a high-featured and well-designed mobile version of the popular auction. The full app includes a barcode scanner for a quick eBay search and allows users full access to their accounts and My eBay dashboard. While notifications aren't always our favorite thing about apps, when you're anxious to watch a few important items, the push in the form of notifications is highly appreciated. We also like that the app includes full sale functionality and will notify you when you get bets on an item, if someone has won it, and when they paid for it. Editors' recommendations
