It aired on April 25, 2004. Plot Drake joins the academic staff at the school to impress a girl he loves who has intellectual interests. He competes in the academic bowl while Josh reluctantly feeds him information through radio, but then Josh's radio frequency interferes with a joint fast-food broadcast, causing the other team to score points. Also, Josh is tired of Megan's pranks and tries to stretch her back but fails every time. In the end, Drake knows the answer to the question: Name three of the six noble gases from what Josh taught him. Worst of all, they get up from the kitchen chairs and be glued by Megan, followed by Josh's scream. The episode title trivia is probably a fake from the smart guy show Audrey Parker-Nicholas and Walter Nichols didn't appear in this episode but Drake mentioned Audrey when he says he's going to tell about Megan for her pranks. Josh mentioned Walter when Drake asks whose dirty laundry it is. On Drake's date with Michelle, Michelle mentioned George Dottie. George Dottie IV is the producer along with Dan Schneider. The Academic Bowl host is played by Lane Napper, who played Andy in The Really Big Shrimp, Ernie in iCarly Park, iWas a Pageant Girl and had a recurring role as Blaine Alexander in Victory. All of these programs were created by Dan Schneider. Josh asks Drake if he wants to play gamesphere. Josh's Grammy bought him the GameSphere in the previous episode of the bet. This is the second appearance for Craig Ramirez and Erik Belonovic. They appeared in the previous episode Shark Pool after Drake suggested they play pool. Stupid Josh seemed to be sleeping on the couch, but in the pilot, he said he couldn't sleep on the couch because he was having problems with his death. However, he could find a solution to these problems. When Josh pours the cannons into the red balloon trying to catch Megan, at first he pours ink in the balloon, but when he explains to Drake about getting Megan, if you look closely when he holds the balloon, you Seeing that's not true at all, it's actually water inside the balloon or maybe Josh mixed ink and water together.
