Pat David's story never knew how many times I cried. Whenever he called to say: I'll be late again dear, he never saw my hurt watch . He always seemed to have a time for others, but not for me - he took me for granted, and hardly ever spoke to me beautifully. He will still kiss me, but only peck, not as he used to kiss me . It eludes me, in the depths I knew. When I saw a book called Secrets of Fascinating Femininity advertised, it rang the bell. I remembered seeing a TV program about this book and how it worked wonders in marriage. A book that will help you bring out all the love and tenderness in your person, says the advertisement. Well, I certainly didn't do it, I didn't get half David's love. I couldn't afford the book, but I sent it anyway, and, it's the best thing I've ever done. When I read the first secret, I was stunned. It's like he's got his bandage removed. Now I could see why David wasn't giving me all his love, even though he must have wanted to do it. I stayed up all night reading it. All the way through it was the same, revelation after revelation, truth after truth. Now the brilliance is back in our marriage. I've never been happier before. David treats me like a queen. He's a great husband. He can't wait to come home to me. Now I see love in his eyes when he smiles at me. He sneaks up and hugs me for no reason at all, except that he loves me. And when he said to me, I love you more than ever. I just cried with joy. I feel so good and full of energy and I feel more confident and feminine. David even opens the car door for me. We have long conversations, and sometimes we go together. He even holds my hand when no one is looking. David also does much better in his work. His family then moved to the west coast of the southern island, where he spent his childhood. The family later returned to the Wellington area and David attended St Bernard Catholic College in Lower Hutt. David's first positions were in the administration of the women's clothing factory, and then in the photographic and automotive industry. In the early 1920s, after marrying Marie Pearson, a young woman of Swedish/English descent, he became a self-employed car driver/restorer specializing in complete redrawing. Despite his manual work career, David has always remained a lifelong avid reader of non-fiction and fine literature. David then moved his growing family and business north to Tauranga in a warm bay of abundance area and for 15 years he was pleased his career and business flourished. At the same time, he and Marie raised six children, four boys and two David eventually became bored with car painting and closed his car painting business, sold land and buildings and became involved in Development. However, he did not find it spiritually satisfying and therefore wrote and published a book called Spraypainting and Panelbeating for the New Zealand Home Handyman. This book sold well as cars, in the 1980s were expensive in New Zealand and prone to rust. The book sold 16,000 copies and was accompanied by a 2-hour VHS video of the same name. It was later converted into a DVD. Around the same time, in 1982, when David was 35, his 66-year-old father had a serious heart attack. His father did not die (he lived to 96), but it was a health wake up call for David and sparked a growing interest in natural health. He researched natural health insatiably for the next five years, and experimented with his health. And in 1988, he wrote and published a do-it-yourself book about practical nutrition called NS Nutrition and Your Health. This book instantly sold surprisingly well, as it was timely and easy to follow. Ideas for further improvement of the book flowed from readers and the next edition was republished as Stay Healthy, delivering what is missing in your diet. The book continued to sell strongly, year after year, mostly by direct mail through the publishing company the Publishing House that David founded. Book sales currently exceed 80,000 copies. It is by far the best-selling New Zealand health book of all time and a new extended 9th edition was published in 2013 after years of further research. David seems to have inherited his passion for writing and research from his Ancestors. His grandfather Joseph Corey attended school in Becharre (in the mountains of Lebanon) with the world-famous Christian Lebanese writer Kahlil Gibran (author of the book The Prophet). His influence seems to have inspired Corey's family with a love of literature. David still lives in Tauranga, New York, with his wife, children and grandchildren and is still actively involved in his faith and business.
