SearchClear SearchCoss searchGoogle appsMini menu Docs Editors Doesn't seem to be update the default style for links to your google doc. This is because Google documents do not treat links as styles. This is understandable, as a link can be applied within text formatted with any other style (e.g. Heading 1, regular text, etc.) If you try to highlight a link and check the context menu, note that Update Normal Text is given to match. This indicates that the text style is set exclusively to Normal Text (that is, it has no link style). Workaround</HTML> Link</HTML> I really wanted to be able to change the default for links in the body of text to avoid underlining them. I realize that highlighting links is a usability plus online, but aesthetically I felt that it often destroyed the flow of a body of text within a document. My workaround is as follows. If you're not using underlines anywhere else* After you write your document, select all the text underline remove underline This will remove underline from all text in the document, including links. If you want to keep the underlines elsewhere (e.g. headings, tables) Select a paragraph of the normal text underline Right-click (ctrl-click on Mac) the selected text Update 'Normal Text' to match remove underline Update 'Normal Text' to match This will remove underlines from all regular text, including links. You could alternatively use this to change the color of the links to the same as the body text, but you would have to leave the underlines in place, otherwise there would be no indication that the links were there.
