The key to understanding the past perfect is what is used to express something that was completed before anything else took place. Topic + was + previously participatory table + objects Examples: Alex had completed the test before Tom asked to see it. They had lived in France for 10 years before they moved home. Topic + was not + previously participatory + objects Examples: He was not eaten by the time he arrived. We didn't buy the car when he told us the news. (Question word) + was + topic + past participation? Examples: Have you done anything before it arrived? What did he do to upset you so much? Important note! The irregular previous participation of the verbs is different and needs to be investigated. Already/ Before already used in the past the perfect positive form of something that nothing was completed before the second action occurred. Before used to be perfect in a similar sense as already, but in all forms. Examples: they had already finished the job when he arrived. He couldn't eat lunch until he called. For used to express over time something had happened before anything else happened in the past. Examples: Susan had worked as deputy director for five years before promotion. They had lived in that house for ten years before he moved in with them. By then, by then, used to express the moment of time until which something had happened. Examples: By the time he asked me, I had finished everything he asked for. They had eaten by the time he walked into the room. Conjuge the verb in brackets in the past perfectly tense. If you have any questions, use the topic that you're mentioned. They ____ (eat) before he arrived.____ (you quit) report before he asked for it?
