[1] History The Egyptian hieroglyphic gate, the fish Fenic dalet Greek Delta Etruscan D Latin D Semite letter Dāleth may have evolved from a fish logogram or gate. There are many different Egyptian hieroglyphics that could inspire this. In Semitic, ancient Greek and Latin, the letter represented /d/: in the Etruscan alphabet, the letter was redundant, but it was still with a hold (see letter B). The equivalent Greek letter is Delta, Δ. The minuscular (minor) form 'd' consists of a loop and a high vertical stroke. It has evolved with gradual variations on the Mayskuleni (capital) form. In the handwriting, it was common to run the arc to the left of the vertical swing, which resulted in a sering at the top of the arc. This serif was extended, while the rest of the letter was reduced, resulting in an inguous stroke and loop. The inguous move slowly evolved into a vertical move. However, in the Vietnamese alphabet, the sound is /z/ in northern dialectes or /j/ in southern dialectes. (See D and DZ (digraph).) In Fiji, it represents a reassized stop /nd/. [2] In some languages) where without a voice, the insoupiable stops contrasting with the voice-aspirating constitution, ⟨d⟩ represents a ruthless /l/, while ⟨t⟩ represents an aspiration /th/. Examples of such languages are Icelandic, Scottish galician, Navajo and Pinyin transliteration of Mandarin. Other uses Roman number D represents the number 500.
