When you skip to the Sentence Type worksheet, there are two things to consider when considering sentence types: the function and structure of a sentence. Given the function of the sentence, we are mainly concerned about the sentence issue ending the sentence. Considering the structure of a sentence, we are interested in how many clauses there are in the sentence. On this page, we'll look at two concepts that can help readers better understand sentence types. Sentence Features Every sentence provides one of four functions. It needs to make statements, give orders, ask questions, shout, and do emotions or ideas. Because of this, you can analyze the functionality of a sentence to understand the type of sentence. Declarial sentences make statements. Most sentences are declarive. Declared sentences always end in duration. Yes I love pizza, this is simple. In each of these sentences, the speaker declares. Therefore, they are declared sentences. Command Sentence A command statement issues a command. In most cases, command statements do not have visible topics. Rather, the subject is implied. Most required sentences end in duration, but they can also end with an exclamation point. Yestay Seat. When scanning the structure, you must first find the behavior or conditionals that stay in the sentence above. Then who should stay to find the topic? and ask yourself. The answer is that you have to stay. It is not clearly stated in the sentence, but it is implicit. Therefore, in command statements, the subject is often suggestive. Again, who or what should we not do to ourselves? and ask yourself. Of course, the answer is, you say again, the subject of command statements would usually be implied. Interrogation sentences Interrogation sentences ask questions. Because of this, all interrogation sentences end with a question mark. For example, do you want to study? Where are you going? In each case, the speaker will request information. Because of this, both sentences end with question marks. Exclamation sentences express excitement or emotion. Writers express exclamation tones at the end of a sentence in an exclamation point. Every exclamation point sentence should end with an exclamation point. Use exclamation point sentences sparingly because too much excitement can make readers or listeners feel sick. Yes it was awesome! I am sick of this! In each case, you can see that the sentence expresses emotions. Exclamation mark indicates to readers that the speaker is shouting or shouting.
